1 (Case called)

2 THE COURT: Again, good morning, everyone. I welcome 3 counsel, parties in interest, members of the public, members of 4 the press, those in San Juan and in the overflow courtroom and 5 observers by telephone.

6 As always, we have in mind the people of Puerto Rico
7 and all of those who are interested in Puerto Rico's future, 8 including GO and COFINA bondholders on the island and on the 9 mainland.

10 I remind you that consistent with court and judicial 11 conference policies and the orders that have been issued, there 12 is to be no use of any electronic devices in the courtroom to 13 communicate with any person, source, or outside repository of 14 information, nor to record any part of the proceedings. Thus, 15 all electronic devices must be turned off unless you are using 16 a particular device to take notes or to refer to notes or 17 documents that are already loaded on the device. All audible 18 signals, including vibration features, must be turned off.

19 As provided in this Court's standing order, no 20 recording or retransmission of the hearing is permitted by any 21 person, including, but not limited to, the parties or the 22 press. Anyone who is observed or otherwise found to have been 23 texting, e-mailing, or otherwise communicating with a device in 24 the courtroom during the court proceeding will be subject to 25 sanctions, including, but not limited to, confiscation of the 1 device and denial of future requests to bring devices into the 2 courtroom.

3 Please also be mindful of your other possessions and 4 take all of them with you, including any trash, when you leave 5 the courtroom at the conclusion of these proceedings.

6 We are here today for oral argument of the cross
7 motions for summary judgment in the Commonwealth/COFINA 8 dispute, which is adversary proceeding 17-257 in the 9 Commonwealth Title III case.

10 Specifically, the Court will hear argument today on 11 the cross motions filed by the Commonwealth agent, the Official 12 Committee of Retirees, the Ad Hoc Group of General Obligation
13 Bondholders, the COFINA agent, the COFINA Senior Bondholders
14 Coalition, and the Mutual Fund Group and Puerto Rico Funds. I 15 have reviewed the briefing carefully, so you need not worry 16 about that.

17 And we have divided the time in groups as between 18 COFINA interests and Commonwealth interests and the parties 19 have further subdivided the time allocations that they were 20 given, and we will run timing on our clock with the lights 21 accordingly.

22 Speak from the podium, speak into the microphone so 23 that everyone can hear you in all of the courtrooms and on the 24 telephone, and I appreciate your cooperation with all of these 25 logistical considerations.

1 I understand that the COFINA-related interests are 2 going to go first, beginning with 30 minutes for opening by 3 Mr. Yanez. Is that correct?

4 MR. YANEZ: That's correct.

5 THE COURT: Please come to the podium, sir.

6 MR. YANEZ: Good morning, your Honor, may it please
7 the Court. Antonio Yanez of Willkie Farr & Gallagher on behalf
8 of the COFINA agent.

9 Your Honor, summary judgment should be entered for the 10 COFINA agent because it is Puerto Rico law that COFINA owns the 11 pledged sales tax. Let me begin with some context. COFINA was 12 created in 2007 to help the Commonwealth emerge from a 13 financial crisis. The idea was that COFINA would be separate 14 from the Commonwealth, that the pledged sales tax would be 15 transferred to COFINA, and that COFINA would issue bonds 16 secured by the pledged sales tax which it could do on good 17 terms precisely because it would own the pledged sales tax and 18 the pledged sales tax would be there to repay the bonds.

19 THE COURT: Why is it called the pledged sales tax if 20 the intent was to transfer title to the sales tax from the very 21 beginning? Why isn't it just COFINA sales tax or the sales 22 tax?

23 MR. YANEZ: It is referred to as the pledged sales tax
24 in English, your Honor, because it provides security to a 25 COFINA bondholder vis-a-vis COFINA.

1 THE COURT: So the reference to pledge is to the 2 relationship between COFINA and its bondholders as opposed to 3 the relationship between COFINA and the Commonwealth.

4 MR. YANEZ: That's correct, your Honor. And, as I
5 say, the idea was that the pledged sales tax would be separate 6 precisely to establish a stream of revenue that was separate 7 from the Commonwealth to repay the COFINA bonds. That was the 8 idea. It is what is reflected in Puerto Rico law in the COFINA
9 enabling legislation. It's what investors were told repeatedly 10 as these bonds were marketed, and COFINA achieved its purpose.
11 There were $16 billion worth of COFINA bonds sold. That $16 12 billion went to the Commonwealth and the Commonwealth used the 13 $16 billion to pay down debt and to pay for other expenses.

14 Now, the Commonwealth parties say that in addition to 15 having gotten the $16 billion, the Commonwealth gets the 16 pledged sales tax, too. They get both. That's their position.
17 They get the proceeds from the COFINA bonds, which they have 18 already received and have already used, and they get the 19 pledged sales tax that is supposed to be there to repay the 20 bonds. There is no legal basis for that result, your Honor, 21 none. The pledged sales tax is COFINA's property for three 22 straightforward reasons. First, the COFINA enabling 23 legislation transferred the pledged sales tax to COFINA and 24 made it COFINA's property.

25 THE COURT: As of when?

1 MR. YANEZ: Upon enactment of Act 56.

2 THE COURT: But as of enactment of Act 56 it had not 3 been collected, to any great extent nobody could take it, spend 4 it, put it anywhere. How do you own something that doesn't 5 exist?

6 MR. YANEZ: Because the tax existed, your Honor. This 7 notion that future property can't be transferred, which I know
8 the Commonwealth parties assert, it's a false premise. The tax
9 existed. It gave rise to a stream of revenue and that revenue 10 can be transferred, your Honor, and we cite cases holding that.
11 That's the basis of securitizations around the country. In the 12 commercial context it has been found that future revenues can 13 be transferred in the form of rents, in the form of properties 14 or in the form of royalties, I should say. And in those cases, 15 too, Judge, the rents have not been collected, the royalties 16 hadn't been collected. The sales tax streams that underlying 17 these other securitizations had not been collected. Yet, 18 courts hold that the stream can be transferred.

19 THE COURT: In all of those situations you have a 20 tangible thing that can be owned that is potentially 21 transferable that is throwing off a defined stream of revenues.
22 Here, as I understand it, constitutionally, the stream of 23 revenues arises from a taxing power. The Commonwealth can't 24 alienate its taxing power. The Commonwealth can't even 25 alienate its collection power. The only way this can exist is 1 for the Commonwealth, to truly exist in the future, the future

2 stream is for the Commonwealth to retain significant rights 3 associated with the taxing power in order for these revenues to 4 be realized.

5 So isn't this more like the cases? And a couple of 6 them were cited. There is a patent case, I think, DDB Tech and 7 there is a Tin Pan Alley songwriting case where rights in 8 musical works to be created or rights in a patent to be created 9 were contractually transferred as of the time before they 10 existed, and then the courts essentially hold that at the time 11 the thing comes into existence, by operation of the prior 12 agreement, it becomes the property of the buyer, but not in a 13 metaphysical sense 10 years before it existed.

14 MR. YANEZ: Couple of reactions, your Honor. First, 15 on the notion that in the cases to which I've referred there is 16 an existing tangible asset, there are many cases in which there 17 is not an existing tangible asset. There are cases that we 18 cite in the municipal finance context in which the asset was 19 the same exact asset we are talking about here, which is a tax 20 that has been imposed that gives rise to a stream of revenue.
21 So too in the royalty cases where the asset could be a song, a 22 composition.

23 THE COURT: That's a fixed expression that has a value
24 that is sold.

25 MR. YANEZ: So too is the tax, your Honor. And the

1 courts hold that with respect to royalties there is title to 2 the composition proper on the one hand and there is the revenue 3 stream on the other. Both are property, both can be 4 transferred.

5 And I would point out, Judge, that on the subject of 6 collection, we have got two cases, one case, FS Media and 7 another case, the State of Ellington, in which collection 8 remain in the hands of the transferor.

9 The way it worked in both of those cases was that the 10 future revenue stream associated with musical composition was 11 sold. The seller retained title to the musical composition.
12 The seller received the royalties that were associated with the 13 musical composition and then passed that along and still the 14 courts held that there was a transfer.

15 THE COURT: I have to confess, I didn't memorize the 16 facts in every single case you cited. Did the courts in those 17 cases speak specifically to the effective timing of the 18 transfer and is that something that's important here? Does it 19 make a difference to you whether COFINA owned it in 2007 or 20 whether COFINA owns it at the moment of collection or at the 21 time of deposit into the DST or some other time?

22 MR. YANEZ: Your Honor, those cases state expressly 23 that there was a transfer. Do they get down to the details and 24 say the transfer occurred at this moment? It's implicit in 25 what they say. But I can't point the Court to a specific

1 statement. But it is the upshot of those cases that there was 2 a transfer at that moment and that transfer required the seller 3 in each instance to pass along the revenues as they came in.

4 In terms of the timing of the transfer here, Judge, I 5 do believe that the way to think about this issue, we would 6 urge, is as an issue of statutory interpretation and that the 7 timing of the transfer is reflected in the COFINA enabling 8 legislation.

9 The Court is familiar with the language, but I'd like 10 to quote it just for a moment. What Act 56 says is that the 11 dedicated sales tax fund and all funds deposited therein on the 12 effective date of this act and all but future funds that must 13 be deposited are hereby transferred to and shall be the 14 property of COFINA.

15 THE COURT: And you read shall as a present mandate as 16 opposed to speaking to a future state.

17 MR. YANEZ: I do, your Honor, and I'll tell you why.
18 There are three things in that sentence that I just read.
19 There is the dedicated sales tax fund. There are the funds 20 already on deposit, and there are the future funds that must be 21 deposited. That's the pledged sales tax.

22 With respect to the first two items, everyone agrees, 23 the Commonwealth parties concede that with respect to the first 24 two items, they were transferred to and became COFINA's 25 property upon enactment of Act 56.

1 THE COURT: Whatever was actually in them at the time.

2 MR. YANEZ: Yes, your Honor. But the issue is with 3 respect to the pledged sales tax. They say that those are 4 different. There are three items in the same sentence. All 5 three items are transferred to and shall be the property of 6 COFINA. Everyone agrees that the first two items are 7 transferred upon the effective date.

8 But the argument is that there is somehow a difference
9 with respect to the third item and that's just not there in Act 10 56, Judge. Act 56 doesn't say that the pledged sales tax is to 11 be treated differently than the other two items. It doesn't 12 say that there should be some condition that's applied to the 13 transfer. It doesn't say that the transfer of the pledged 14 sales tax only becomes effective upon the deposit of those 15 funds.

16 What it says with respect to all three, and the 17 pledged sales tax no less than the other two, is that those 18 items are hereby transferred to, meaning that the transfer 19 happens upon enactment. It's in the present tense, Judge, and 20 from the transfer forward they shall be the property of COFINA.
21 That is, we urge, the straightforward plain meaning 22 interpretation of the statutory language.

23 It is an interpretation, Judge, that respects the 24 legislative assembly's decision to treat the pledged sales tax 25 like the other two items. It respects the language employed by

1 the legislative assembly, including its use of the present
2 tense, and it respects the legislative assembly's determination 3 not to have imposed a condition, which is really what the 4 Commonwealth parties are arguing for. Their argument is that 5 the transfer of the pledged sales tax was conditional upon 6 deposit of those funds, that it required deposit of those funds 7 in order for the transfer to become effective. That is just 8 not what Act 56 says, Judge.

9 THE COURT: I would just like you to address two other 10 aspects of the question that I asked.

11 So the Commonwealth agent argues deposit, and I think 12 we understand why there is more space between collection and 13 deposit potentially than just a collection. If the moment of 14 an automatic transfer of title of this happened at collection, 15 let's leave aside deposit, is that something that is 16 potentially consistent with the statutory language? When it 17 comes into being without anything further having been done, 18 then it comes into being such that it belongs to COFINA. And 19 does that timing make a legal difference for you that's kind of 20 critical to this ownership issue that I should be focused on?

21 MR. YANEZ: I think that with respect to the first 22 part of the question, whether a transfer of ownership or 23 transfer of title upon collection, whether that's consistent 24 with the statutory language, there is separate statutory 25 language in Act 56 that requires the funds to be directly

1 deposited when they are collected. It is certainly consistent 2 with that statutory language.

3 The question is why. And the reason that direct 4 deposit is required is because there is an effective transfer 5 at the moment Act 56 became effective and it is in that 6 respect, Judge, that I think an automatic transfer as 7 collection happens is not consistent with the statutory 8 language because it doesn't reflect the direction in the 9 statute that the pledged sales taxes are hereby transferred.
10 Not that they are going to be transferred when they are 11 collected. The stream that's created from the tax is 12 transferred at the moment of enactment.

13 In terms of whether it makes a difference, I think the 14 Commonwealth parties think that it makes a difference. I think 15 they have asserted that somehow if it is some transfer that 16 happens in the future that that alters the legal landscape. I 17 will leave that to them to argue.

18 From our perspective, Judge, it doesn't make a 19 difference and the reason it doesn't make a difference is that 20 it is because COFINA owns the property that it is required to 21 be deposited into the dedicated sales tax fund and that it 22 comes to us at the moment of collection. So the answer to your 23 question is they are all bound up together.

24 THE COURT: So the Commonwealth has no rights in these 25 future revenues as of 2007?

1 MR. YANEZ: Correct.

2 THE COURT: Nonetheless, the taxing power and the 3 collection power exist. There is no inconsistency in that?

4 MR. YANEZ: There is not, your Honor. The 5 antisurrender provision in the Puerto Rico Constitution applies 6 to infringements by the other branches of government on the 7 legislative assembly's ability to tax on. The legislative 8 assembly has the authority as part of its taxing power both to 9 spend and to allocate tax proceeds, and this is an allocation 10 of tax proceeds and it is an expenditure where they paid over 11 the pledged sales tax in exchange for $16 billion.

12 This dialogue, Judge, highlights the important focus 13 that should be on and that is on the language of the statute.
14 The language of the statute is critical here because, as I've 15 said, this is a case of statutory interpretation first and 16 foremost. And the Commonwealth parties try to minimize the 17 significance of the statutory language. Really, they invite 18 the Court to disregard it. There are two main arguments. One 19 is that future property can't be transferred. I've already 20 addressed that. The other argument is that the Court should 21 look through the form to the economic substance and if the 22 Court does that, it will see that there was no true sale here.
23 The Commonwealth parties argue that ownership wasn't 24 transferred because Puerto Rico retains the right to eliminate 25 the SUT and they point to accounting and other materials

1 outside the statute as further supporting the notion that there 2 was no transfer here. Those arguments are addressed in our 3 papers. I am not going to recite everything that we say in our 4 papers on that subject, but I do want to make a few key points.

5 First, the Court cannot look through the words of the 6 COFINA enabling legislation. The law, as I've said, is that 7 statutes must be interpreted and enforced according to their 8 plain meaning. That is what I mean when I say that this is a 9 case first and foremost about statutory interpretation. The 10 law in that regard requiring interpretation and enforcement of 11 the plain meaning of the statute has been articulated by the 12 Supreme Court of the United States. It's been articulated by 13 the First Circuit. It has been articulated by the District of 14 Puerto Rico. All of them repeatedly, your Honor. In fact, the 15 First Circuit has explained that statutory construction in 16 Puerto Rico begins with the text of the underlying statute and 17 ends there as well.

18 THE COURT: But the defeasance or the elimination or 19 reduction language and the substitution language are in the 20 statute. I didn't have to look through or behind the statute 21 to find that the Commonwealth retained the right to eliminate 22 or reduce this thing that you say COFINA owned in 2007 and also 23 retains the right to say, you don't get that thing that you 24 own. We are going to give you something else. In focusing on 25 the statute I don't see how I can avoid those issues.

1 MR. YANEZ: Two responses, your Honor. With respect 2 to the substitution point, substitution is required to the 3 extent that the Commonwealth wanted either to reduce or to 4 eliminate the pledged sales tax. Others will speak to that 5 subject in more depth.

6 But even assuming that the Commonwealth has retained 7 the ability to eliminate the pledged sales tax, that is power, 8 Judge, that governments retain at all times with respect to all 9 property. It doesn't mean that citizens or, in this case, 10 COFINA doesn't own the property until the government takes that 11 action.

12 THE COURT: And when the government takes that action, 13 what is that? Is that conversion? Is it a breach of contract?
14 The Commonwealth says it can't be a constitutional taking 15 because of the relationship between the instrumentality and the 16 territorial government. What is that?

17 MR. YANEZ: I think it is potentially all of those 18 things, Judge. I think that it can be a taking. I think that 19 it can be a breach of contract. I think it can be conversion.
20 And I think it can be an action in violation of the statute 21 which should itself give rise to a cause of action on behalf of 22 COFINA or COFINA's bondholders.

23 With respect to true sale, Judge, I won't belabor the 24 point. True sale, as we have said in our papers, is a contract 25 law concept. It is not a concept that applies to statutory

1 interpretation. None of the cases that are relied upon under 2 the true sales cases that are relied upon by the Commonwealth 3 parties apply in the context of statutory interpretation. And 4 with respect to the threshold question, whether the Court can 5 look through the statutory language to the effect that the 6 pledged sales tax is transferred and is the property shall be 7 the property of COFINA, the Court can't ignore that language on 8 a true sale basis.

9 The same is true with respect to the accounting and 10 the other materials outside of the statute. To use the 11 accounting materials, to just pause on those for a moment, 12 whether those help the Commonwealth parties, I don't know.
13 They seem to think that they do. But the accounting materials, 14 like lots of other materials, including the log itself, state 15 explicitly that the COFINA-enabling legislation transferred 16 ownership of the pledged sales tax. But regardless of how they 17 might be read, the key point is that those and the other 18 materials outside the statute should not be considered by the 19 Court in connection with statutory interpretation. The Court's 20 decision should be based on the statutory text.

21 THE COURT: Because your position is that the statute 22 is unambiguous, notwithstanding the simultaneous use of is 23 hereby transferred, shall be in the future and the other things 24 that have been argued as potential heads of ambiguity.

25 MR. YANEZ: That's correct, your Honor. I would add

1 one point to that. What the First Circuit requires and what 2 they have said is an undeniable textual ambiguity is required
3 to move outside the statute. Our position it is unambiguous.
4 Certainly, there is no undeniable textual ambiguity.

5 Let me turn to the next point, which is that the 6 legislative assembly had the authority to transfer the pledged
7 sales tax. From our perspective, Judge, it's taking a step 8 back.

9 There are three critical points here. One is that the 10 pledged sales tax was transferred through Act 56. Two is that 11 the legislative assembly had the authority to transfer the 12 pledged sales tax. And third is that the more specific and 13 frankly more limited constitutional provisions that have been 14 relied upon by the Commonwealth parties don't detract from the 15 legislative assembly's power to have transferred the pledged 16 sales tax.

17 Focusing on the power to transfer, that resides in the 18 legislative assembly's taxing and police powers. The Puerto 19 Rico Constitution gives the legislative assembly broad 20 authority when it comes to matters of taxation. The Supreme 21 Court of Puerto Rico has confirmed that taxing authority 22 includes within it the power to spend and the power to allocate 23 tax revenues. The legislative assembly separately has broad 24 police powers to extend to economic matters.

25 Now, the Retirees seem to dispute the extent of the 1 police power, but that's not really where the parties have 2 joined issue. Where the parties join issue here on 3 constitutionality is really over the separate constitutional 4 provisions, the debt limits, the balanced budget clause, and 5 the debt priority clause. They argue that those, either 6 together or separately, limit the legislative assembly's power 7 to transfer the pledged sales tax. None of them do. I will 8 speak to each individually, Judge, but I want to make a couple 9 of points at the outset.

10 One is that the general obligation bondholders refer 11 to the constitutional provisions at issue here as a series of 12 interlocking protections that work together to have prevented 13 the transfer of the pledged sales tax. The constitutional 14 provisions can't prohibit the transfer. They can't have 15 prohibited that transfer collectively if none of them does 16 individually. And none of them does, as I will come to.

17 The other point is that the Commonwealth parties argue 18 that their constitutional interpretation can involve 19 considerations outside the text of the relevant constitutional 20 provisions. Whatever that might mean, there has to be some 21 basis in the text of the Constitution to find a constitutional 22 violation and there is not, your Honor.

23 I will begin with the debt limits. As the Court 24 knows, these are limits on the amount and maturity of debt, and 25 they apply, by their terms, only to full faith and credit debt.

1 There is no dispute about that. Debt limits apply to direct 2 obligations of the Commonwealth for money borrowed directly by 3 the Commonwealth and backed by its full faith and credit.

4 Separately everyone agrees that COFINA debt is 5 nonrecourse debt and that the legislative assembly had the 6 authority to issue nonrecourse debt. That should end the 7 analysis, your Honor. That should be the end of the analysis
8 on the constitutional debt limits. There is no violation
9 because the legislative assembly's authorization of COFINA
10 debt -- to say it differently, the legislative assembly's 11 authorization of COFINA debt can't have violated the debt limit 12 and does not violate the debt limits because the debt limits
13 don't apply to COFINA debt.

14 THE COURT: The constitutional convention intended for 15 there to be the potential for the legislative assembly to 16 essentially put the Commonwealth in irretrievable lock up to 17 its eyeballs. As long as they said it's not a pledge of full 18 faith and credit, they can effectively alienate every valuable 19 asset and potential piece of revenue of the Commonwealth. As 20 long as they don't say full faith and credit, that's not a 21 violation of this debt limit?

22 MR. YANEZ: That's correct. It is not a violation of 23 the debt limit. There is no constitutional prohibition on the 24 issuance of nonrecourse debt. That's not to say that there 25 aren't limits. There are limits from a practical perspective

1 that are imposed by the market and there are limits that are 2 imposed by the democratic process. As legislators seek 3 reelection, they will articulate or they can articulate their 4 views on these subjects. They will be called upon to answer 5 for past action and past views that they have held and the 6 people of Puerto Rico can decide.

7 At the end of the day, Judge, the Puerto Rico 8 Constitution places a limit, and it's a very specific limit, on 9 one kind of debt, full faith and credit debt, and it doesn't 10 speak to and, therefore, does not limit other kinds of debt.
11 Instead, it relies upon the discretion of the legislative 12 assembly.

13 Now, it is true that the way in which that discretion
14 has been exercised is now being criticized and it may be true 15 that those criticisms are well taken, but that does not mean 16 that the Constitution didn't grant that discretion to the 17 legislative assembly to begin with or the fact that someone can 18 now legitimately or otherwise second-guess the legislative 19 assembly, meaning that there has to be a constitutional 20 violation.

21 The other point I would add, your Honor, is with 22 respect to the reach of the constitutional debt limits. The 23 text matters. The text, as I've said, applies to direct 24 obligations of debt issued directly by the Commonwealth for 25 which its full faith and credit is pledged. To hold that it

1 extends to debt that is not directly issued by the Commonwealth
2 and is not direct debt of the Commonwealth for which the full 3 faith and credit is not pledged is simply to ignore. That's 4 not to interpret the constitutional debt limits. It is to 5 ignore them.

6 Turning to the balance budget clause, there is no
7 violation there either. All the balance budget clause says is 8 that appropriations for any fiscal year shall not exceed total 9 resources estimated for that year.

10 THE COURT: That's what it says in Spanish.

11 MR. YANEZ: It is.

12 THE COURT: And they argue that the English version 13 that says total revenues is the definitive version.

14 I know that you are on yellow light. I am going to 15 put another three or four minutes on your clock because unless 16 your colleague is planning to argue the English Spanish issue, 17 I'd like to hear you walk through your interpretation of the 18 process that led to Spanish being definitive.

19 MR. YANEZ: The process is this, Judge. The Puerto 20 Rico Constitution was debated, passed, and adopted in Spanish.
21 It is true that as part of that process it had to be approved 22 by the United States Congress. Law 600, which is what they 23 rely on, and law 447 speaks to that, but those provisions taken 24 together result in the Congress receiving a translation, the 25 Congress approving that translation, and then authorizing the

1 Constitution to be adopted in Puerto Rico, which happened 2 through a combination of legislative and public functions in 3 Puerto Rico, necessarily happened in Spanish.

4 THE COURT: And so you are saying that once things
5 happened in Washington it had to go back? I think the statute
6 says to the constitutional convention and then a proclamation 7 by the governor in order to be effective, and both of those 8 things would have happened in Spanish and, therefore, Spanish 9 is the definitive version?

10 MR. YANEZ: Yes, your Honor. The governor and the 11 people of Puerto Rico.

12 THE COURT: Starts and ends in Spanish in Puerto Rico?

13 MR. YANEZ: Yes.

14 Let me turn to available resources. The pledged sales 15 tax is not available resources because it was transferred to 16 and is COFINA's property. It is no more available to the 17 Commonwealth and any other asset that's been transferred. That 18 is the plain meaning of available, your Honor. Here, too, the 19 Commonwealth parties read into the debt priority clause
20 restraints that are not just there. They read substantive 21 constraints on the legislative assembly's taxing and police 22 powers into the debt priority clause by asserting that 23 available means that certain assets cannot be transferred, 24 certain court tax revenues can never be transferred and, that 25 assets can't be rendered unavailable simply by transferring

1 them.

2 The text of the debt priority clause doesn't say
3 anything like that, Judge. It doesn't say that certain 4 resources have to be available. It doesn't say that the 5 legislative assembly can't transfer tax proceeds. It doesn't 6 say that tax proceeds that have been transferred are somehow 7 still available to the Commonwealth.

8 Judge, it doesn't make sense that these kinds of 9 substantive limitations were what was intended. The whole 10 argument boils down to the word available. It is, again, that 11 the debt priority clause places significant constraints on the 12 legislative assembly's taxing and police powers, that this was 13 part of a carefully conceived and implemented constitutional 14 framework and that the vehicle for expressing these significant 15 constraints on important powers that are expressly granted 16 elsewhere in the Constitution is the word available and the 17 phrase available resources. That just makes the word available 18 do too much work, your Honor.

19 The more logical conclusion is that the framers would 20 have been more explicit if a limitation along those lines was 21 intended. If this was the culmination of a series of 22 interlocking protections, the more logical conclusion is that 23 the framers would have stated clearly that the debt priority 24 clause took back power from the legislative assembly that was 25 granted earlier and elsewhere in the document. It would have

1 been explicit about what the limitations are. And if some of 2 the resources had to be available at all times, they would have 3 said that.

4 The other point that I will make here is that the 5 Commonwealth parties' reading places the legislative assembly
6 in an impossible position. The debt priority clause operates 7 in years where there is a budget shortfall. That's what it 8 says by its terms. There was no shortfall in 2007 when the 9 pledged sales tax was transferred, so the debt priority clause 10 didn't restrain the transfer then. Nothing in the text of the 11 debt priority clause indicates that transfers that have already 12 happened can be invalidated retroactively, and to hold that it 13 does would place the legislative assembly in the impossible 14 position of never knowing what it can transfer because any 15 transfer might be undone if there is a budget shortfall in 16 later years.

17 MR. YANEZ: Thank you, your Honor.

18 THE COURT: Mr. Kirpalani for 20 minutes.

19 MR. KIRPALANI: Good morning, your Honor, may it
20 please the Court, Susheel Kirpalani of Quinn Emanuel Urquhart &
21 Sullivan on behalf of the COFINA Senior Bondholders' Coalition.

22 I think your Honor is aware, my client is owed almost 23 $4 billion in senior and subordinate funds.

24 I am going to do my best not to cover the ground that 25 Mr. Yanez covered, but there were a couple of questions your

1 Honor asked that if I have time, either now or at rebuttal, I'd 2 like to try to address.

3 But for now I'd like to focus on two areas, two 4 discrete areas: First, whether there is anything in the 5 bankruptcy code or PROMESA that trumps Puerto Rico law in 6 deciding which debtor owns the property in dispute; and,
7 second, whether the Commonwealth's reservation of 8 constitutional power to modify its tax laws means COFINA is not 9 the owner of the dedicated sales tax.

10 First and foremost, what is the source of property 11 rights in a bankruptcy case? Due to our system of dual 12 government in the United States, the question is not whether 13 federal law could preempt state law, because we know we can.
14 The question is whether Congress intended to do so here or 15 whether it intended to respect state's rights, specifically the 16 rights of Puerto Rico.

17 There is a very clear rule that we must follow when 18 interpreting federal bankruptcy law. The U.S. Supreme Court 19 has made it crystal clear that in bankruptcy cases there is a 20 presumption against preemption. You need to have a controlling 21 federal rule of law in order to displace state property law.

24
25

1 MR. KIRPALANI: The relevant case law from the Supreme 2 Court is Nobelman v. American Savings case, the Barnhill v.
3 Johnson case. These cases stand for the proposition that in 4 the absence of an express controlling federal rule of law, 5 property interests and interests in property are creatures of 6 state law.

7 The same was held in the Jefferson County, Alabama, 8 case and there, it's important, Judge Bennett noted that in 9 particular, a property interest must be "afforded in federal 10 bankruptcy court the same protection the holder would have 11 under state law if no bankruptcy had ensued." That's an 12 important concept, because you're going to find it in PROMESA, 13 and we'll get to that.

14 Indeed, Congress and the courts have repeatedly 15 emphasized that the Bankruptcy Code is not intended as a 16 general matter to preempt state law, and they look to other 17 places in the U.S. Code. They look to Title 28. Title 28, 18 Section 959(b), even if it doesn't apply to this fact pattern, 19 it doesn't apply to the fact pattern the Supreme Court relied 20 on in Midlantic National Bank v. New Jersey Department of 21 Environmental Protection either, which is an abandonment case.
22 There, the Supreme Court said the section "nevertheless 23 supports our conclusion that Congress did not intend for the 24 Bankruptcy Code to preempt all state laws that otherwise 25 constrained the exercise of the trustee's power."

1 This is even more so, your Honor, and you know this 2 from your other cases, from other proceedings in these Title
3 III cases, that in the chapter 9 context, where sovereign 4 immunity is sacrosanct, Section 903 of the Bankruptcy Code has 5 been held to be the constitutional mooring for municipal debt
6 adjustment, and that makes clear that nothing in chapter 9 7 should be interpreted to limit a state's power in respect of 8 creating property rights.

9 The court held, in the New York City Off-track Betting
10 Corp. Southern District bankruptcy case, which is cited in our 11 papers: "Nothing in Chapter 9 may be interpreted to interfere 12 with the power of a state to control its municipalities." It 13 necessarily follows that debtors under Chapter 9 must follow 14 state laws, at least those that are not preempted by federal 15 law. That constitutional mooring principle from Section 903
16 was included by Congress in PROMESA in Section 303.

17 The Supreme Court has expressly held, your Honor, that 18 the Bankruptcy Code does not preempt state law, especially in 19 areas of creating property rights. The leading case is Justice
20 Scalia's case in BFP v. Resolution Trust, from 1994. Justice 21 Scalia told us, "federal statutes impinging upon important 22 state interests cannot be construed without regard to the 23 implications of our dual system of government," and "to 24 displace traditional state regulation in such a manner, the 25 federal statutory purpose must be clear and manifest."

1 Otherwise, the Bankruptcy Code will be construed to adopt 2 rather than displace preexisting state law.

3 There was a decision by the Eleventh Circuit that came 4 out after this lawsuit was filed, In Re Northington, cited in 5 our papers, a late 2017 case, and there, it was a Georgia 6 statute, which the courts below were interpreting to see how 7 they get interpreted in the bankruptcy case, and this is what 8 the Eleventh Circuit had to say "Given the acknowledged 9 background principle at work here -- namely, that property is 10 created and defined by state law -- we should hold that the 11 Bankruptcy Code prevents and counteracts the ordinary operation 12 of Georgia's pawn statute only if we find some clear textual 13 indication that Congress intended that result."

14 No greater jurist than Justice Sotomayor, when she sat 15 in this courthouse, for the Southern District of New York, in 16 the First Fidelity case, 1995, cited in our papers, said, "The 17 U.S. Supreme Court has ruled that property interests, including 18 those at issue in bankruptcy actions, are created and defined
19 by state law. That was a New Jersey case where there was a 20 prepetition assignment of rent. She said: I can't decide 21 this. There's no federal common law here. There's nothing in 22 the Bankruptcy Code here. I look to what New Jersey would say.

23 And recently Justice Sotomayor, in the Merit
24 Management case, cautioned all the federal courts once again, 25 don't invent things that are not in the Bankruptcy Code. That

1 was in the Merit Management case, your Honor, also cited in our 2 papers.

3 Your Honor, when you sat as a bankruptcy court judge
4 in the Eastern District in 2000, in the In Re President
5 Communications Network case, said the same thing. This is 6 bedrock bankruptcy principles. Bankruptcy estate is determined 7 in accordance with the applicable nonbankruptcy law.

8 So, what about Puerto Rico?

9 We found a case, your Honor, in Puerto Rico, written 10 by Judge Tortorella, when he sat in the district court, from 11 Puerto Rico, and his ruling was affirmed by the First Circuit
12 in 1980. The case is Segovia Development Corp. v. Constructora
13 Maza, Inc., 628 F.2d 724. The First Circuit explained, and I 14 quote: "The Bankruptcy Act does not undertake to determine 15 what property belongs to the bankrupt as to the date of 16 bankruptcy, or the existence, priority or validity of liens on 17 such property. Questions of that nature are determined by 18 reference to the laws of the state," and he was referring to 19 Puerto Rico when he said that. This is in footnote 4 of the 20 decision at page 726. It's the First Circuit decision.

21 Judge, this case was not cited in any of the papers.
22 We did inform counsel prior to the hearing that we may 23 reference it today. I apologize for that.

24 The cases cited by the Commonwealth's side really are 25 to the contrary. They cite not that First Circuit case but

1 some other First Circuit cases, like Ground Round. Ground
2 Round didn't reject state law. In Ground Round, the First 3 Circuit did their best to try to replicate, What would the 4 state of Pennsylvania say about these particular property
5 rights? That's exactly what your Honor's being asked to do 6 here as well.

7 They cite other cases, which I will coin the phrase 8 "idiosyncratic cases," where a federal policy or a federal 9 statute was interfered with by some bizarre notions of state 10 law, and in those rare situations, which don't apply here, the 11 court held that federal law is going to preempt the 12 idiosyncratic state law. There's nothing idiosyncratic about 13 creating a securitization. There's nothing idiosyncratic about 14 the statute at all. And most important, there is no competing 15 federal statute, certainly not in the Bankruptcy Code, so let's 16 look at PROMESA, because that would be an important place to 17 start.

18 In PROMESA, there are four specific statutes that I 19 want your Honor to review with me, if you will, please. What 20 we'd like to mention, to begin with, is we've got, first and 21 foremost, Section 301 of PROMESA. 301 does a couple of things 22 that are directly germane to this issue. First, it does not 23 include Section 541. The property of the estate cases, 24 therefore, that are cited by the Commonwealth party are 25 completely irrelevant to the issues here, even though they

1 don't go as far as the Commonwealth parties say they do.

2 Section 201(b)(1)(M) tells the Oversight Board what a
3 fiscal plan must include. Though we're not here litigating 4 over the fiscal plan, it's important to keep it in mind, 5 because what 201(b)(1)(M) says is that you have to respect what 6 the preexisting state law was in terms of the separateness of 7 different entities within the territory and the territorial 8 instrumentality relationships.

9 Then we've got 201(b)(1)(N). Here's where Congress 10 says that same fiscal plan must "respect the relative lawful 11 priorities or lawful liens, as may be applicable, in the 12 Constitution, other laws" -- they're referring to Puerto Rico 13 when they say other laws -- "or agreements of a covered 14 territory of covered territorial instrumentality that were in 15 effect prior to the date of enactment of PROMESA." That's not 16 an indication from Congress that we want to preempt state law.
17 It's the opposite indication.

18 And the best one -- I would say there's two more to 19 come -- Section 407(a) of PROMESA, says, "In order to protect 20 creditors" -- the title of the statute is called protection of 21 creditors -- "while an oversight board for Puerto Rico is in 22 existence, if any property of any territorial instrumentality 23 of Puerto Rico" -- so if any property of COFINA -- "is 24 transferred in violation of applicable law under which any 25 creditor has a valid pledge or lien on such property, or which

1 deprives any such territorial instrumentality" -- again, that's 2 COFINA -- "of property in violation of applicable law" -- the 3 COFINA Enabling Act -- "that assures the transfer of such 4 property to such territorial instrumentality for the benefit of 5 its creditors" -- that's us -- "then the transferee shall be 6 liable for the value of such property."

7 That's not an indication from Congress that they want 8 to preempt state law. That's an admonition to everyone that 9 we'd better respect Puerto Rico law, or else there's going to 10 be liability.

11 The last point, your Honor, where will this litigation 12 machine previously unknown to man or woman ultimately end up?
13 We hope, and I know your Honor certainly hopes, it will be in a 14 plan of adjustment.

15 Let's look at one of these critical criteria for 16 confirming that plan of adjustment. Section 314(b)(6) of 17 PROMESA says -- this is the alternative to what your Honor will 18 remember from Chapter 11 cases, the best-interests-of-creditors 19 test -- "The Court shall confirm the plan if the plan is 20 feasible and in the best interests of creditors," and then 21 Congress went on to define that here, "which shall require the 22 court to consider whether available remedies under the 23 nonbankruptcy laws and Constitution of the territory" -- that's 24 Puerto Rico -- "would result in a greater recovery for the 25 creditors than is provided by such plan."

1 We're not here arguing confirmation, your Honor. What 2 I'm trying to suggest is that Congress in many ways made it
3 abundantly clear, even though Justice Scalia said we didn't 4 have to because there's a presumption against preemption, but 5 just to be very careful, because we're imposing a new law here 6 on a lot of creditors and a lot of property rights that were 7 already granted, and said, We'd better look back and make sure 8 we comply with Puerto Rico law. That's our answer to the 9 Commonwealth parties in terms of whether the Bankruptcy Code or 10 PROMESA preempt or displace state law.

11 What the Commonwealth agent does, though, your Honor, 12 without citing anything, is he says that, Well, you know,
13 Puerto Rico law is great, but it just provides the raw material 14 for the Court to determine properly.

15 There are two reasons to put something in quotes, your 16 Honor. One is where a court actually said it, and the other 17 one is when you make up a phrase and you go like that with your 18 hands. I searched, and I couldn't find a case that supports 19 that quote.

20 Your Honor, what the GO Bondholders suggest is that if 21 you allowed the Commonwealth to define property rights, that 22 would improperly allow the Commonwealth to redefine the 23 bankruptcy framework Congress imposed on it. Really? How do 24 you square that with all the Supreme Court case law that says 25 the exact opposite? There is no bankruptcy framework. They're

1 just making this up, this tension that they say exists. And in 2 particular here, your Honor, and as you've heard in other 3 contexts, here, we had preexisting claims, property rights,
4 liens and the like. It would have raised patent -- patent -- 5 on its face Fifth Amendment issues if Congress had tried to 6 displace all state law that had been created and to pass a 7 bankruptcy law for Puerto Rico mid-swing. They balanced that 8 right by making it abundantly clear, in four or five or six 9 places in PROMESA, to make sure we respect preexisting state 10 law rights.

11 Let me turn next to the Retiree Committee. I hope I 12 can get through all of these.

13 The Retiree Committee's suggestion that the federal 14 interest is the Commonwealth's ability to have a fresh start 15 overlooks the fact that, first of all, fresh start is not the 16 only guiding principle in the Bankruptcy Code or in PROMESA.
17 Respect for state law is also part of the federal policy.
18 Regaining access to the capital markets so that Puerto Rico 19 could one day stand on its own two feet is another federal 20 policy, and frankly, it's one that seems pretty incompatible
21 with the notion that Congress would vitiate property rights
22 that were just created under Puerto Rico law.

23 Plus, your Honor, this argument that the fresh start 24 is the guiding principle that should answer every decision
25 proves too much. Wouldn't it enhance the Commonwealth's

1 ability to have a fresh start, just eliminate all debts for no
2 consideration at all? Of course it would, but the generic
3 fresh start policy is not how judges answer questions that come 4 up in a bankruptcy case. The rights of creditors must be 5 balanced. When the creditor is secured, you have to give an 6 indubitable equivalent. Why? Why Put that albatross around 7 the neck of the debtor if the fresh start policy was the 8 guiding principle?

9 But you know what my favorite is? The biggest flaw in 10 the fresh start motto that's advanced by the Retirees'
11 Committee is the selective application of it. The Retirees' 12 Committee is asking your Honor to consider a fresh start for 13 their debtor because their debtor is more important than my 14 debtor. That's an invitation for the Court to show favoritism 15 to one of two competing debtors in a property dispute. That's 16 not the role of an Article III court.

17 Then the Retirees' Committee pivots and says, Well, 18 it's territory clause argument. The territory clause requires 19 the COFINA Enabling Act to yield to federal law. That doesn't 20 work either.

21 Yes, it is true. U.S. territories have been held to 22 not have the same sovereignty as a state because of the 23 territories clause. And yes, it's true that Congress, and I'm 24 quoting from their brief, "may thus enable a territory's people 25 to make large-scale choices about their own political

1 institutions and may grant a territory legislative power merely 2 as extensive as those exercised by any state legislature, but 3 it is all subject to Congress's right to revise, alter, or 4 revoke it."

5 That's all great, but it's a nice hypothetical. The 6 question assumes the answer in trying to decide it. Congress 7 did not revise, alter, or revoke any rights of Puerto Rico in 8 respect of creating property interests. We just went through 9 all those statutes.

10 With that general background on federalism, your 11 Honor, I'd like to turn, if I can, to some of the other Retiree 12 Committee arguments.

13 First, they cite, Well, it wouldn't be property of 14 COFINA because -- it would be property of the estate of the 15 Commonwealth. That's a head scratcher, your Honor. As you 16 know, Section 541 is not even included in PROMESA. Certainly 17 the Commonwealth can't be invoking a concept of property of the 18 estate when Congress chose not to do so.

19 The other one they cite is, the Retiree Committee
20 says, Well, there's no present claim under the Bankruptcy Code 21 to future taxes against the hypothetical merchant, or the 22 customer, and thus, there was no asset to transfer, and thus, 23 there's no property right. This one also leaves me scratching 24 my head. Property under state law is not limited by what 25 counts as a claim or a right to payment under bankruptcy law.

1 If that's true, if I've got a debtor that owns another company,
2 the equity in that other company is not property of the first 3 debtor, because equity is not a claim. Equity is not a right
4 to payment. It's just equity. State law determines property 5 rights.

6 See, I knew I was going to run short on time.

7 Your Honor, let me pivot quickly to the notion of the 8 Commonwealth's ability to alter, replace, repeal the SUT and 9 why it's irrelevant to ownership.

10 It's irrelevant for the reasons Mr. Yanez said, that 11 ownership is determined by the text of the statute.

12 What the GOs and the Commonwealth agents are doing is 13 they are taking a provision of the COFINA Enabling Act, Section 14 14(c) -- it's a long provision; it starts with the statement, 15 "The Commonwealth of Puerto Rico hereby agrees and assures any 16 person, firm or corporation," and then it goes on, basically 17 that it will not interfere with COFINA's rights. And then ends
18 with the last sentence of that long passage. It ends with, "No 19 amendment to this title shall undermine any obligation or 20 commitment of COFINA."

21 So what do they rely on? They honestly take what I 22 would call the equivalent of a legal tweezers to this provision 23 and try to pull out a proviso that was put in in order to 24 ensure that additional protective language called a 25 nonimpairment covenant would not be rendered unconstitutional,

1 and by reserving this power back to the Commonwealth, they 2 claim, therefore, there's no property at all.

3 The remedies that COFINA and its bondholders will have 4 against the Commonwealth if they do revoke or repeal the 5 statute are outside the scope, but they certainly don't 6 determine the property interest that were granted by statute.

7 Thank you, your Honor.

8 THE COURT: Thank you.

9 Mr. Dunne.

10 MR. DUNNE: Good morning, your Honor. May it please 11 the Court, Dennis Dunne, from Milbank Tweed, on behalf of AMBAC 12 Assurance Corporation.

13 AMBAC is the holder and insurer of approximately $1.35
14 billion in accreted value of senior bonds issued by COFINA. I 15 was assigned two topics to cover today, and I think I'm about 16 to commit two oral-argument footfaults. I'm going to call an 17 audible and go off-script and, perhaps more recklessly, try to 18 use Elmo, if that's possible, to try to have a textual 19 analysis.

20 THE COURT: We are not set up to broadcast visuals 21 outside of the courtroom, and Ms. Ng would have to come over 22 and pull the Elmo out.

23 MR. DUNNE: I didn't know where he lived either.

24 THE COURT: He lives in the podium. You'd have to be 25 describing what's on the Elmo for the benefit of those who

1 listen. Do you want it?

2 MR. DUNNE: Then I might as well just describe what 3 I'm talking about. Everybody has the language in front of 4 them. I'm going to pick up basically where Mr. Kirpalani left 5 with respect to the substitutability point.

6 THE COURT: OK.

7 MR. DUNNE: We'd like to call everybody's attention to 8 the proviso in Section 14(c) and want to make, at least 9 eventually, I hope, a very textual argument as to why the 10 COFINA side's argument is correct.

11 But before I do that, I want to point out what's 12 obvious, and Mr. Kirpalani said this, that this is a right 13 that's reserved to the Commonwealth. Whatever the scope of 14 that proviso is, it doesn't affect whether or not the property 15 has been effectively transferred. That's an argument that 16 we've had in other contexts. What it does is, perhaps, be an 17 inchoate right that's not yet exercised.

18 While we're talking about the property right being 19 transferred, I do want to call the Court's attention to a 20 pleading in a slightly different context, but the oversight
21 board agreed with respect to the effective property transfer 22 when it wrote, and I quote, "The law provides that the 23 Commonwealth doesn't own certain taxes [SUT or substitutive
24 tax] even though the Commonwealth legislates the taxes, 25 collects the taxes and can repeal the taxes." That's in 1 paragraph 7 of the oversight board's opposition to the 2 certification motion.

3 Turning back to the text of the proviso, your Honor, 4 I'd say that the Commonwealth parties would like to make an 5 argument that the beginning of that proviso that says "the 6 foregoing provisions do not limit the power of the Commonwealth 7 to limit or restrain the nature of amount of such taxes or 8 revenues" is a separate thought, and then you pick up 9 thereafter, where it goes on to say, "or to substitute similar 10 or comparable collateral by other taxes, fees, charges or other 11 income" is a completely different concept.

12 Why do I think that's textually wrong?

13 When you go down two lines, when it says, "If, for the 14 following fiscal years, the revenues projected by the secretary 15 of the treasury from such substitutive tax, income, or 16 collateral is equal or greater than the service of the debt," 17 and it going on. The substitutive tax income and collateral 18 refers back to the three components that preceded it.

19 What preceded it?

20 Taxes, other revenues, or collateral.

21 The way the Commonwealth parties read this language
22 would basically render unnecessary and surplusage substitutive
23 tax and substitutive income. Why? Because substitutive 24 collateral alone would work, because collateral's already 25 defined two lines up, where it says "collateral by other taxes,

1 fees, charges or income," meaning you can't substitute it with 2 a firehouse. You've got to have another revenue stream, but 3 they've already defined collateral. Their argument is they 4 want you to believe they did it again, and it's just 5 surplusage; it's just a referring back solely to the 6 collateral.

7 I'd make one point, and I'm not going to get into the 8 English versus Spanish debate, but I do want to point out this.
9 Here, in my argument, we have taxes, revenues, collateral, and 10 then when you repeat it three, four lines down, it's tax, 11 income, collateral. If you go to the Spanish translation --
12 and I am not a Spanish speaker -- the original Spanish, I 13 should say, they use the same three words. "Revenues, income"
14 is denoted by one word, ingresos, in both cases. I don't know 15 whether that means revenues or income, but whatever it is, it's 16 the same, and so there's really no space between that.

17 Lastly, your Honor, I think that your Honor's 18 construction of this proviso has to be read in conjunction with 19 the language that went before it and was informed by the 20 language that preceded it where the whole intent of this was 21 not to hinder or impair the ability to pay the bonds. Yes, you 22 could reduce it. Maybe there's excess SUT, but as long as 23 there's a substitutive tax and a dedicated stream to pay it, 24 then you haven't run afoul of the language. I think the 25 textual reading shows that the Commonwealth's argument is false

1 and I will move on in the minutes I have.

2 THE COURT: The Commonwealth argument that you're 3 refuting here is the argument that the Commonwealth can reduce 4 or eliminate without having to true up by way of substitution 5 as the substitution only applies to the specific 6 substitution-specific subclause of that sentence of 14(c).

7 MR. DUNNE: You understand it precisely, your Honor.

8 THE COURT: Thank you.

9 MR. DUNNE: Moving on quickly, in the remaining time, 10 I wanted to talk about the Commonwealth movants' argument that 11 the COFINA structure is an end run around the debt ceiling, an 12 evasion of the debt ceiling, and therefore, it should be 13 invalidated.

14 Your Honor has ruled that whether any COFINA bond 15 issuance is or is it not violative of debt and without scope, 16 but nevertheless, the Commonwealth movants use the potential 17 for that as a basis for attacking COFINA and the structure.

18 For me, that requires Olympic-level gymnastics.

19 THE COURT: In this context, I think what I read the 20 Commonwealth to be saying was that if it's a constitutional 21 violation of such magnitude, then COFINA can't exist at all and 22 if COFINA can't exist, it can't own anything, and therefore, it 23 is within the scope as an ownership question.

24 MR. DUNNE: Correct. I believe that's right, your 25 Honor.

1 The Commonwealth agent argues that Act 91 is 2 unconstitutional not because, and I'll quote from their reply
3 brief, "any particular bond issuance" but because it "allowed 4 the Commonwealth to issue bonds through COFINA without 5 impacting the debt limit." That's at page 29 of their reply 6 brief.

7 Whether or not COFINA ever, in fact, issued bonds in 8 violation of the debt ceiling is irrelevant, in our view, once
9 they have established a hypothetical possibility that COFINA 10 could have tripped a debt limit were their bonds included in 11 the calculation of Commonwealth debt, inquiry's over, and "the 12 legislation and all transactions thereunder are invalid."

13 For starters, let's talk about what the limits of that 14 principle are. If the Court adopts that logic, it would be 15 easy to see how numerous acts of a legislature could suffer a 16 similar fate. Almost any economic legislation enacted by the 17 Puerto Rico legislature could be subjected to that test, and it 18 wouldn't matter how close or not a Commonwealth was to the debt 19 limit at the time, because you could always hypothesize
20 creation of enough debt, issuance of enough debt in the future
21 to exceed the debt limit. But I think the Commonwealth's agent 22 is actually saying something more categorical and potentially 23 sly, which is the quote from that reply brief indicates it was 24 not any bond issuance that created the infirmity but the simple 25 fact that the structure allowed debt to be removed from the 1 debt limit calculation, regardless of whether the limit was 2 ever subsequently hit.

3 Such a broadside to municipal bond financing is 4 stunning, but I think it's completely mistaken here, and let me
5 point out three reasons in the time I have why I think this 6 argument fails.

7 First of all, COFINA was not created to make an end 8 run around the Commonwealth calculation. It was created to 9 allow access to cheaper financing, and in some of the briefs,
10 it's clear that they got a lower interest rate than if there 11 was Commonwealth-direct borrowings. The Commonwealth is not 12 out of capacity to issue debt at the time. In Exhibit B to the 13 Commonwealth agent's original complaint, they say it was 14 probably 2009 before the debt limit was hit, even if you put 15 all the COFINA debt onto the Commonwealth balance sheet, after 16 three series of COFINA bonds were issued and before nine or ten 17 series of GO bonds were issued.

18 Second, the PR Constitution contains no provision 19 precluding the dedication of future tax revenue streams to 20 particular bonds or public corporations. Such anti-dedication 21 provisions exist in other state constitutions, such as Alaska
22 and Georgia. This Court should not rewrite the Puerto Rico
23 Constitution to include one.

24 Third, the Puerto Rico Constitution expressly 25 compensates debt being issued by public corporations and

1 expressly provides such debt shall not be counted against the 2 debt limit. In the briefs, there's a footnote saying there's 3 actually a senator who argued, We can't do that. We should 4 count all the public corp. debt as Commonwealth debt so we make 5 sure that we don't have too much aggregate debt. That did not 6 pass. It was not adopted. Your Honor should not move against 7 the will of the framers of that Constitution.

8 THE COURT: I'm going to give you a couple seconds to 9 answer this and to make your last point.

10 MR. DUNNE: OK.

11 THE COURT: That footnote makes that statement about 12 that piece of legislative history that's not pointed to in the 13 footnote, and in my searching through the forest, I couldn't 14 find it as an exhibit. Do you know offhand where that is, or 15 will somebody write me a letter afterward with the specific 16 citation to that legislative history?

17 Somebody raise your hand if you can undertake to do 18 that.

19 MR. DUNNE: We can write it.

20 THE COURT: Thank you.

21 MR. DUNNE: Your Honor, last point, and this is an 22 ACT-specific point, we cite an Indiana Supreme Court case, the 23 Hawkins v. City of Greenfield case, for the notion that you do 24 not look behind the express intent of the legislature. You do 25 not look through the form to some underlying, platonic

1 conclusion of substance.

2 In response, the Commonwealth agent cites a Rappaport
3 decision, also from the Indiana Supreme Court. The only point
4 I want to make on this is that the Rappaport decision predated 5 the decision of the same court, the Indiana Supreme Court, that 6 we cited by 20 years, and the Hawkins case notes the criticism
7 of Rappaport and says that fortunately, the well-reasoned 8 decisions of most Indiana courts refuse to extend Rappaport and 9 the application of the debt limitation to prohibit the creation 10 of new divisions or the financing of public projects through 11 tax assessments.

12 In essence, the case that the Commonwealth movants 13 cite is of no vitality even in the jurisdiction for which they 14 cite it, in Indiana, because 20 years later, the Hawkins court 15 cabined it tightly to the facts. And their facts were 16 reasoned, it's just that that reasoning was overbroad.

17 Thank you, your Honor.

18 THE COURT: Thank you, Mr. Dunne.

19 Mr. Mayer, for summary judgment.

20 MR. MAYER: Thank you, your Honor. Tom Mayer for the 21 Mutual Fund Group.

22 First, with respect to the timing of the transfer,
23 your Honor, the only question is, What does Puerto Rico law 24 provide and what can Puerto Rico law provide? All of this new 25 tax stuff is an invitation to this Court to create a federal

1 common law issue, which I submit has no place in this 2 proceeding.

3 With respect to any application of PROMESA to the 4 question of when the transfer occurred or what was transferred, 5 I join in the other counsel who say that you cannot 6 retroactively take away COFINA's interest in the SUT that it
7 has in the Commonwealth, and you can't retroactively take away 8 the bondholders' interests in revenues that were pledged to the 9 bonds without violating the Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments, 10 and I note in this connection that the Retirees' Committee, in 11 their reply brief, made reference to Section 552 of the 12 Bankruptcy Code.

13 Your Honor, we moved for declaratory judgment that 552
14 could not apply, and that cause of action was struck as outside 15 the scope, so I submit that any attempt to create a decision 16 today using Section 552 is outside the scope of this hearing.
17 We repeat our observation that 552, like any other provision of 18 PROMESA, cannot be applied retroactively to destroy property
19 rights that were created under Puerto Rican law. And again, 20 it's only a question of what does Puerto Rico law provide, and 21 what can Puerto Rico law provide?

22 I know that your Honor knows, and this is for, I 23 guess, two weeks from today, we have taken the position that 24 those questions are best answered by the Supreme Court of 25 Puerto Rico, but I will move to a final point.

1 The Retirees' Committee and others make a big deal of 2 the fresh start principle, and Mr. Kirpalani has already 3 addressed that issue. I want to amplify it with the closing 4 remark of Mr. Yanez. He said any transfer might be undone.
5 You're putting the legislature in a position where any transfer 6 might be undone.

7 Your Honor, I've looked through PROMESA fairly 8 carefully, and I can't find the words "fresh start," but I can 9 find the words "access to capital markets" in five places. I
10 can find them in Section 101(a), where it is the first purpose
11 of the Oversight Board, and I can find them in Section 201(a) 12 where it is the first purpose of a fiscal plan, and I can find 13 them in Section 209. It is the last duty of the Oversight
14 Board, to obtain access to the capital markets.

15 Your Honor, when you fly to Puerto Rico, you land at 16 Luis Munoz Marin International Airport. That was sold. That 17 was a transfer. Revenues from that airport, those were 18 available revenues. I realize that's a thing, and you have 19 already asked what the difference is between a thing and an 20 inchoate stream of taxes. Given practice in other states, I 21 don't think there is a difference, and I don't see why there is 22 any federal common law principle that prevents a state
23 legislature or a Commonwealth's legislature from enacting a law 24 to transfer the property. But if you strike down COFINA on the 25 ground that it couldn't happen, you're putting Puerto Rico in a

1 situation where it will not regain access to the capital
2 markets for probably the professional lifetimes of the people
3 in this court, because nobody's going to lend Puerto Rico money
4 unless it's backed by a stream of revenues that are committed 5 to the repayment of the debt.

6 With that, I reserve the balance of my time.

7 THE COURT: You're reserving it for rebuttal?

8 MR. MAYER: Yes, I reserve for rebuttal, and I may 9 very well yield it back to other members of the COFINA side.

10 Thank you, your Honor.

11 THE COURT: You have two minutes and 45 seconds out 12 there, in the bank.

13 MR. MAYER: Thank you.

14 THE COURT: OK.

15 We now turn to the Commonwealth's interest, 16 Mr. Stancil, for 33 minutes.

17 MR. STANCIL: Yes.

18 Good morning, your Honor, and may it please the Court, 19 my name is Mark Stancil from the firm of Robbins Russell, and I 20 represent the Ad Hoc Group of General Obligation Bondholders.
21 My counsel today are Mr. Luc Despins and James Bliss, from Paul 22 Hastings, and Mr. Rich Levin, from Jenner & Block.

23 With the Court's indulgence, we've divided up the 24 substantive issues to avoid duplication. I'm going to be 25 addressing what we call the core constitutional issue, which

1 is, assuming for the moment that COFINA's creators intended to 2 transfer the pledged sales taxes, did they have the 3 constitutional authority to do so?

4 Mr. Despins will then address the nonconstitutional
5 issue regarding whether Act 91, in fact, transferred ownership
6 of those revenues to COFINA.

7 Time permitting, Mr. Bliss will address the balanced 8 budget clause issue.

1 MR. STANCIL: Mr. Levin will address the fresh start 2 argument and I believe also the civil code issues that he has 3 raised.

4 So, your Honor, if I may, let me begin by restating 5 the constitutional question. I think it's fairly clear from 6 the discussion thus far. Assuming for the moment that the 7 legislature tried to do what the COFINA parties suggest, which 8 is to irrevocably transfer the pledged sales taxes to COFINA, 9 did they have the authority under Puerto Rico's Constitution to 10 do that? The answer is no.

11 Article 6, section 8 gives the constitutional debt,
12 what we often call the GOs, gives them an absolute first claim 13 on all of the Commonwealth's available resources. As the 14 COFINA parties would have it, available resources means 15 whatever resources the legislature deems fit to make available.
16 And that's wrong for three main reasons that I'd like to get to 17 today.

18 First, the COFINA position defies the plain text of 19 the available resources provision and the context in which it 20 appears. I will walk through word by word of the text --

21 THE COURT: I will look forward to that.

22 MR. STANCIL: Thank you, your Honor.

23 Second, their position ignores the founder's stated 24 intent to place the constitutional debt in "absolute first 25 term" over "all of the resources of the government."

1 You didn't hear a thing about the drafting history in 2 my colleague's presentation earlier today, but, again, I will 3 walk through that in detail as well.

4 Third, and certainly not least, their position would 5 eviscerate the interlocking protections in article 6. It
6 attributes a fundamental level of incompetence to the drafters 7 of Puerto Rico's Constitution to suggest that this web of 8 protections for the people of Puerto Rico and constitutional 9 debt holders are evaded with a simple step to the left by 10 saying, whoops, we have transferred these future revenues, and 11 I am going to get into why that would render this entire system 12 effectively meaningless.

13 But, in short, article 6 was supposed to be an 14 absolute commitment to constitutional debt holders. They want 15 to turn it into an option to withhold resources from 16 constitutional debt holders, and it has these careful 17 limitations on the amount of revenue that can be absolutely 18 committed for debt service. They turn that into an unlimited 19 license to commit an unlimited amount of resources irrevocably 20 for an unlimited amount of debt. In short, it turns article 6 21 on its head.

22 I think it's helpful to maybe start by reading the 23 text of article 6, section 8. That's the centerpiece of the 24 entire constitutional scheme. It says: In case the available 25 resources, including surplus, for any fiscal year are

1 insufficient to meet the appropriations paid for that year, 2 interest on the public debt and amortization thereof shall 3 first be paid and other disbursements shall thereafter be made 4 in accordance with the order of priorities established by law.

5 Available resources has meaning under the 6 Constitution. It can't be just assumed away that available 7 means whatever the legislature says. And ultimately both the 8 COFINA agent and the Senior Bondholder Coalition, I believe, 9 everybody would reluctantly concede that the legislature
10 doesn't get you to define the constitutional term available 11 resources. This Court is charged with giving content to that 12 term, as it would any other provision like, what does due 13 process mean? What does a taking amount to?

14 THE COURT: Isn't it a fundamental political function 15 of elected leaders to determine what resources are prioritized 16 resources, determine the appropriate application of resources?
17 Unless you are going to say that this first priority means that 18 any time there is a shortfall everybody on the island 19 necessarily starves, everything has to get shut down, and any 20 money that was ever spent before somehow has to be clawed back 21 and that's what a court can understand. How is the Court in a 22 position to determine whether babies should eat or traffic 23 lights should be on or houses should get to stand up before 24 bondholders get paid? Those are important political 25 distinctions.

1 MR. STANCIL: Your Honor, there are probably three 2 different answers to that.

3 Let me start by first saying under the Constitution, 4 if the Constitution is respected, it will never come to that 5 precisely because of the debt limit, and we will get to that in 6 a minute.

7 Your Honor is exactly right. It would be crazy, would 8 it not, to think that you could give bondholders an unlimited 9 check to come ahead of all other services of the government.
10 But it doesn't follow from that that the bondholders identified 11 in the Constitution do not come ahead of other expenditures.

12 And don't take my word for it. Take the word of the 13 Puerto Rico legislature for 40, 50 years, until two summers ago
14 when we started throwing out statutes. This is a statute. I 15 apologize it is not in our briefs. It's in our complaint. I 16 think this answers your Honor's question correctly. 23 17 L.P.R.A. 104(c) is the statutory order of priorities that is 18 directly referenced in the Constitution. So that addresses 19 your Honor's question, did they really mean to pay 20 constitutional debt before public health, safety, and welfare?
21 Yes, your Honor, they did.

22 If I may, I would read to you a few provisions from 23 104(c). It begins: In keeping with section 8, article 6 of 24 the Constitution in Puerto Rico, the governor shall proceed 25 according to the following priority rules in disbursement of 1 public funds when resources available for a fiscal year are 2 insufficient to cover the appropriations made for that year.

3 1. Payment of interest and amortization related to public
4 debt. 2 -- it's a little wordy. I'll paraphrase. 2.
5 Commitments under legal contracts enforced. Court judgments, 6 binding obligations to safeguard credit. 3. Order that 7 disbursements be made for expenses under the allocations for 8 recurrent expenditure related to (A) the preservation of public 9 health (B) protection of persons and property (C) the public 10 education programs (D) the public welfare programs (E) the 11 payment of employer contributions to retirement systems and 12 pension payments to individuals etc., etc.

13 THE COURT: I as a court should respect that 14 legislatively determined list of priorities because you like 15 that and that's not really offensive and you could sleep at 16 night because babies are going to get fed. But, otherwise, I 17 should ignore anything, any other judgment that the legislature 18 made, and come up with some holistic concept of availability 19 that was in the third branch?

20 MR. STANCIL: No, your Honor. That's not how it 21 works. This is what we would say is absolute clear evidence of 22 what the intent of the founding document means. I want to come 23 back to the premise of your question.

24 THE COURT: This is a statute passed by the 25 legislature.

1 MR. STANCIL: Yes. I will just come back to the first 2 phrase of Section 23 L.P.R.A. 104(c) which says: In keeping 3 with section 8, article 6, here is what we do. They recognize 4 that that's what article 6 means.

5 Your Honor, let me take the premise, which is no one 6 is taking anything out of the mouths of babies because we have 7 a debt limit. And the reason we are here, in large part or in 8 substantial part, is because COFINA was used as an end run 9 around the debt limit and that's why the Commonwealth is facing 10 choices that it should not have to face. If it had been 11 respected, the Constitution had been respected and any 12 commitments made for debt, absolute commitments made for debt 13 were limited to 15 percent of their revenues, we would not be 14 here.

15 THE COURT: But it doesn't say absolute commitments
16 made for debt. It says absolute commitments made for direct 17 obligations of the Commonwealth backed by the full faith and 18 credit of the Commonwealth.

19 And we know from the cases that have been cited all 20 over the place that there are different kinds of state 21 constitutional provisions and there are constitutional 22 provisions that require referenda or put caps on any kind of 23 debt on the state at all. Could have been written that way.
24 Wasn't written that way.

25 MR. STANCIL: Your Honor, I respectfully disagree that

1 available resources is as flexible as COFINA would have it.

2 THE COURT: You said that we wouldn't be in this 3 problem but for violation of the debt limit, and so I think 4 you've necessarily put the import of the debt limit on the 5 table in that last sentence.

6 MR. STANCIL: I apologize. Absolutely. I think that 7 makes a mockery of the debt limit. Let's focus on what the 8 purpose of the debt limit was. So the debt limit implies by 9 its terms the full faith and credit debt because, as I've just 10 described in article 6, section 8, full faith and credit debt 11 gets this absolute first priority. So, of course, you would 12 want to limit the amount of such promise you can make.

13 The fiction of COFINA is that you can evade the 14 central policy objective of the debt limit by transferring 15 future revenues as opposed to merely promising future revenues.
16 It would make a mockery. I think it would sort of ascribe an 17 astonishing level of incompetence to the drafters of the 18 constitutional debt limit to say yes, you are going to hold 19 their feet to the fire and limit them to 15 percent if they are 20 going to make this super full faith and credit promise. We 21 will let you sell revenue before it even gets to the coffers.

22 THE COURT: I think I perceive the COFINA people, and 23 they can tell me if I'm wrong on rebuttal, as saying that it's 24 not the transfer that's the key magic with respect to the debt 25 limit; it's that the COFINA statute not only doesn't say full

1 faith and credit; it says you look to a particular body of 2 revenues, and there is no commitment to use the taxing powers
3 to get something more to replace those revenues that are taken 4 off the table. So the COFINA people seem to focus on it not 5 being full faith and credit and not being a direct obligation.

6 MR. STANCIL: With respect, your Honor, their position
7 is entirely question begging. They say the debt limit doesn't 8 apply because it's not full faith and credit debt, but that 9 skips over the question of whether the transferring in the 10 first instance is consistent with the idea of the debt limit.

11 If we can take a step back. If the Commonwealth 12 had -- grant my premise, which I understand your Honor is 13 testing, but grant my premise that GO debt does have what the 14 Constitution says, an absolute first claim on resources.

15 If we were facing only that, in any given year it 16 would no more than 15 percent of their revenues over the 17 average of the last two years when they issued the debt, but 18 roughly 15 percent of the budget go to debt service. We would 19 be facing --

20 THE COURT: For full faith and credit debt.

21 MR. STANCIL: Yes, your Honor. We would be facing a 22 fraction of the drain on the Commonwealth's resources had they 23 respected that and not done an end run around.

24 Your Honor, if I could explain the way that this makes 25 not just a mockery of section 2 of the debt limit but the rest

1 of article 6, Section 8. I would like to come back to the text
2 because I promised you that I would deliver what available 3 resources means.

4 Can we back up one section. Article 6, section 7.
5 And then we will read article 6, Section 8. I think that will 6 give full content to what available resources means.

7 Section 7 tells the Commonwealth to balance its 8 budget. It says: The appropriations made for any fiscal year 9 shall not exceed the total resources, including available 10 surplus estimated for said fiscal year unless the imposition of 11 taxes is sufficient to cover said appropriations provided by 12 law.

13 When they wanted to refer to total resources of the 14 Commonwealth, they are referring there to estimated for the 15 year. So 7 says, when you do your budget, look at what you 16 expect to come in the door. And then section 8 says, well, if 17 it turns out what comes in the door are insufficient, the 18 available resources, then I think in context those two 19 provisions made clear when the drafter said available
20 resources, they meant everything that comes in the door. I am 21 going to tell you what the drafters meant because I can -- you 22 haven't heard anything about it, but they gave us a 23 contemporaneous and retrospective explanation of what they 24 meant.

25 THE COURT: You're reading the balanced budget clause

1 in its Spanish incarnation, and you are comfortable with that.

2 MR. STANCIL: In this particular context we have 3 not -- yes is the direct answer to your question. I'll move
4 on. We do not raise the UCC's balanced budget clause argument.

5 Section 7 talks about total resources estimated for 6 such a year. Section 8 says, what do you do if available
7 resources are insufficient? I think read in tandem those two 8 are very clear what they meant by available resources.
9 Available is every bit that comes in that year through the 10 Commonwealth taxing power.

11 Let me jump back again to section 7 because the word 12 available is there as well. Total resources including 13 available surplus. No one is suggesting that when they are 14 budgeting under section 7 that they are looking at some parts 15 of surplus that may be left over. But they can take part of 16 that out. This is consistent meaning given to the 17 constitutional term available. They meant it to apply to what 18 actually comes in the door by virtue of the Commonwealth's 19 activities and taxing power.

20 I promise that we would find out what the drafters
21 meant. They don't really have an answer to this. Let's start 22 with former Chief Justice Trias Monge, who is a delegate to the 23 Puerto Rico constitutional convention. He was a chief justice
24 in the Supreme Court of Puerto Rico. He was sort of a Madison 25 and Hamilton kind of rolled into one.

1 He wrote in 1982 a report basically saying, here is 2 what went on when we drafted the Constitution, and he talks
3 about article 6. He says that the purpose of article 6, 4 Section 8 was -- he says: The provision finally adopted by the 5 convention placed in absolute first term and beyond the scope 6 of the power of the governor the payment of interests and the 7 amortization of the public debt.

8 With respect, your Honor, he did mean exactly what we 9 said when he said, yes, it really is absolutely first. If you 10 can sell future revenues for future years ahead of time, that's 11 not an absolute first term.

12 Again, in 1961 --

13 THE COURT: I would just like to go back to 14 Mr. Mayer's airport illustration. They sold the airport, got a 15 bunch of money for it and, of course, there are landing fees, 16 there are all sorts of things, there are subleases generated by 17 the airport. Under your theory do we have to undo and look 18 back through that transaction as well? Commonwealth keeps the 19 money it got through the airport but can go and get the rent 20 from Burger King and the candy stand and the duty free because 21 those should be available resources of the Commonwealth that 22 should have never been alienated?

23 MR. STANCIL: No, your Honor, we don't need to get 24 into any of that and let me tell you why. When you are selling 25 a physical asset, there is no question that legislature has the

1 authority to sell a physical asset as opposed to future tax
2 revenues, and we know this in part from, again, Trias Monge.
3 He actually was explaining what recurso, the Spanish term, 4 means in the Jones Act, which predated the Constitution. The 5 reference was made to ingresos, which it was just translated to 6 mean only taxes or only sort of income stream.

7 He explained that resources is actually a broader 8 concept, but then he clarified and this goes directly to your 9 Honor's question. He clarified that physical assets and 10 tangible assets are not subject to the claim but if you
11 monetize them, you sell them, then those cash and cash 12 equivalents are.

13 Your Honor, I think this is a very, with respect to 14 Mr. Mayer, easy case. The tax revenues are at the core of what 15 available resources are. In fact, I think the corollary of his 16 position is far more untenable. He would say, well, we can 17 sell anything and everything we need to, and we can hive off 18 every sliver of tax revenue and create a special entity or 19 special fund.

20 The case that we cite from Ohio, Shkurti, addresses 21 this directly. That was an attempt to set up a special fund to 22 take on debt, in effect. And the Court said, you just can't 23 set up a special fund for this and special fund for that 24 because there is no end to it. And COFINA is actually a 25 painful illustration of that process. COFINA started as a

1 little $300 million bridge loan, in effect. We are now $16
2 billion into this and there is no end in sight.

3 For all of the sort of, we would say, irrelevant
4 equitable arguments about how this was cheap and we needed it
5 and it's easy and we might need it going forward, the worst 6 thing, with respect, your Honor, that could be done for the 7 Commonwealth is to give them a blank check, and that is exactly 8 what COFINA is because it is limitless, absolutely limitless.
9 And we are told that, well, both parties voted for it and 10 everybody seemed to like it. That's exactly when 11 constitutional provisions are most important.

12 Mr. Yanez referred to the political process being the 13 check. Not when it comes to the Constitution. The things that 14 we put into a Constitution are those things primarily that we 15 don't trust the political process to address, and that is I 16 think especially true with respect to debt, because it's very 17 popular to borrow money and push your problems down the road, 18 which is why, for example, back to the interlocking 19 protections, article 6 has a 30-year maturity limit on full 20 faith and credit debt. COFINA maturities extend out 40 years 21 because you just push out, push out, push out your problems, 22 and you don't ever get the fiscal responsibility that is 23 essential.

24 If I may, can I come back to the drafting history. In 25 1961, Puerto Rico adopted the debt limit and in the course of

1 that discussion they addressed what they meant by available
2 resources, and when they are referring to available resources,
3 they said, the truth is -- this is Exhibit 1 to our summary 4 judgment motion, which is docket 311 at page 4. The truth is 5 that per the terms of the referenced constitutional provision, 6 referring to article 6, all of the resources of the government
7 are committed to those obligations that refer to the full faith
8 and credit debt. And this is critical as well. They didn't 9 think that was some formalist ruling that could easily be 10 sidestepped. They said, we are not worried about increasing 11 the debt limit because Puerto Rico has done a good job paying 12 its bills. The good judgment that it has exercised in 13 contracting the public debt and in not using subterfuges to 14 evade the limits imposed on it, that was responsible for 15 COFINA's good credit. With respect, your Honor, COFINA is 16 exactly the kind of subterfuge they would not have 17 countenanced.

18 We heard a lot about public corporation debt. This 19 will spill over into other municipal markets or this will limit 20 the Commonwealth's ability to commit some resources to debt for 21 public corporations. Your Honor, I'm sure, is well familiar 22 with the clawbacks and everything else that's in this case. I 23 think the record is crystal clear that that has nothing to do
24 with the available resources pledge. If I may, your Honor, 25 again, the drafting history is absolutely clear.

1 When they were referring to public corporation debt 2 not counting against the debt limit, there is a reason why and 3 my adversaries don't want to talk about it, if you will indulge
4 me one more time. This is on page 221 of the 1961 Senate
5 report in connection with the debt limit. That's also Exhibit 6 1 to our motion for summary judgment.

7 When discussing revenue bonds, it should be clarified
8 that the bonds issued and to be issued by the public 9 corporations of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico will not be 10 taken into account when calculating the state's borrowing 11 margin. That's where they want to stop. I am going to keep 12 going. Since, for the payment of the same, the good faith of 13 the people of Puerto Rico is not committed, and they will 14 continue to be paid only from the income derived by said
15 corporations. The reason that they don't count for debt limit 16 purposes is they get their own money. COFINA tries to take the 17 Commonwealth's money and scoop it into public corporations. No 18 one thought that made any sense under the debt limit. There is 19 another provision.

20 THE COURT: And COFINA relies on the full faith and 21 credit reference and says that the defendant's revenue is sort 22 of surplusage.

23 MR. STANCIL: The word is and, your Honor. That is 24 their position, but it's completely untenable with that 25 excerpt.

1 But I've got another one. When they were adopting the 2 debt limit they had to go to Congress and get permission. So 3 there is a hearing before the subcommittee on territorial and 4 insular affairs. This is Exhibit 19 to our summary judgment
5 reply. It says there: All the general government investments 6 in schools, roads, everything is done by the Commonwealth and 7 is included in this limitation. The only other thing are the 8 municipal bonds and they occurred in small amounts, which 9 greets the marketplaces. They were very limited in scope.

10 Here is the quote. And the others that we have are 11 the public corporations, but those are revenue bonds. They are 12 not sustained from taxes. Again, I think it's very clear. I 13 think it makes perfect sense.

14 What is essence of COFINA, the reason that they are 15 here saying this is their property? It's because they believe 16 it to be irrevocably given to them. They believe it to be 17 theirs and no one can take it away. Let's assume that it is 18 right. It's inconsistent to think that the framers put this 19 elaborate framework in place to protect the people from full 20 faith and credit debt, too much good threatened the people of 21 Puerto Rico. Too much would delay hard financial choices in 22 times of shortfall. But they left this loophole. Started at 23 300 million. It's now 16 billion. By the time COFINA is paid 24 off, if it is paid off, it will be 50 billion plus more of the 25 Commonwealth's resources gone. I think it attributes a sudden

1 incompetence to think that he would leave a loophole this big.

2 They say, there is nothing in the text that says we 3 can't do it. Well, that's not the way courts interpret 4 Constitutions. Let me give you a couple of examples. The 5 first is actually from the Puerto Rico Supreme Court itself.
6 This is a provision in the Puerto Rico Constitution that 7 prohibits the government from giving support to private 8 schools. Well, Puerto Rico tried to get around that by giving 9 support to private school students. This case is called 10 Asociacion de Maestros de Puerto Rico v. Torres, 137 D.P.R. 528 11 (1994). That case appears in the COFINA agent's motion for 12 summary judgment at page 24 for a different proposition.

13 But the Supreme Court of Puerto Rico rejected this 14 attempt to dodge the prohibition on supporting private schools
15 by supporting private students, and they said that the statute 16 ingeniously tries to sidestep the constitutional obstacles by 17 reframing from schools to students. It rejected that and said 18 that is inconsistent with the framer's intent.

19 They talk about other states. Other states reject end 20 runs like this all the time. The case from Indiana, 21 Cerajewski, is a great example. There was a debt limit on 22 municipalities limited to 2 percent of their property values
23 and a municipality was up against that limit. So the state 24 created a new district to build a vocational school in that 25 district. The Indiana Supreme Court rejected that end run and 1 said, that just isn't the way that it works.

2 Your Honor, again to the surrendering of the taxing
3 power, as your Honor has noted, I don't think the COFINA
4 parties can have it both ways. The Constitution either 5 prevents the Commonwealth from giving away the taxing power or 6 it doesn't. They want to say, well, it doesn't prevent them 7 from giving us an irrevocable right to the taxes that have to 8 be kept in place forever and ever and ever. But that doesn't 9 amount to a surrender of the taxing power. Respectfully, your 10 Honor, I don't think that can be.

11 There is also a lot of attention paid to what they 12 call either the deference or the idea that there is economic 13 legislation so our hands are up. That's not right. Mr. Yanez
14 actually referred, I think he said the more specific provisions 15 that we are talking about in article 6 do not limit the more 16 general provisions of the taxing power and authority and police 17 powers. That's exactly backwards. This specific does limit 18 the general. That is 101 statutory and constitutional 19 interpretation.

20 I believe, your Honor, may I add back my extra minutes 21 unless the Court has questions? May I do the same and put them 22 in for rebuttal?

23 THE COURT: I do have a question which you may feel 24 you've already answered, but I'd like you to take it up 25 directly, which is, in looking for sort of core fundamentals of

1 the requirements of the various statutes, I'd like to go back 2 to the debt limit.

3 At some point don't we have to be able to tie your 4 core fundamental argument to the language that the framers used 5 in the constitutional provision and in that constitutional 6 provision the framers specifically said, direct debt, full 7 faith and credit, obligation of the Commonwealth. And if you 8 look through and you look at COFINA, I don't see any of those 9 three things. How do I find, without rewriting the 10 Constitution or deciding what mistakes I believe the framers 11 should not have made, how do I find a constitutional violation?

12 MR. STANCIL: Because, your Honor, you read 13 constitutional provisions, like statutory provisions, in 14 harmony. And the debt limit, when it refers to full faith and 15 credit debt, understands, the premise is that full faith and 16 credit debt owns a first claim on all available resources.

17 So the textual hook, if you will, is the definition 18 and meaning of all available resources, which is why the 19 drafters say all. When they say in the debt limit, you've 20 promised in your full faith and credit debt, you've promised 21 all available resources, so I am going to limit how much you 22 can issue, it would ignore the commitment of all available 23 resources to assume that they can alienate those resources.

24 THE COURT: I then have to read into the definition of 25 resource every single tax revenue, every single product of the 1 exercise of the taxing power.

2 MR. STANCIL: By the Commonwealth, your Honor. You
3 don't have to read that into it. That's in the drafting 4 history itself.

5 THE COURT: But it's not in the text --

6 MR. STANCIL: They didn't have any trouble
7 interpreting resources when they are budgeting. They 8 understand when they are estimating how to do their budget they 9 look at everything they expect to get from all sources. So we 10 wouldn't read into the balanced budget provision in section 7, 11 for example, the ability of the legislature to say, well, this 12 doesn't count and that doesn't count and this doesn't count and 13 that doesn't count. The terms have meaning. They have 14 consistent meaning across each of these provisions. So I think 15 it is clear from section 7, section 8. It pops up again as 16 sort of a distraction, it pops up again in section 19 with 17 respect to delinquents. And the COFINA senior bondholders seem 18 to think that helps them somehow that section 19 refers to the 19 limits of available resources being a limit on how much 20 provision can be made for delinquents.

21 With respect, your Honor, each time this appears, the 22 word available resources, it means, in context, everything that 23 comes in and that's the only way to honor the intent of the 24 drafters who said, this is an absolute first term. There is 25 nothing absolute if it depends on the discretion of the 1 legislature taken away. Absolute first term.

2 If we were reading the federalist papers, I think we 3 would be up here making the same exact point and it's exactly 4 the same and it worked for 50 plus years. In fact, if we go
5 back to the 104(c) statute I was referencing, everybody 6 understood this is how it worked. First means first and it is 7 strange, very strange, to think that when they read the 8 Constitution from 1952 up through 2006, they understood one 9 category of debt, one and one only, was the head of the central 10 services of public health, safety, and welfare. But in 2006 11 they decided, there is actually another thing we can do, which 12 is we can sell revenues and now we are going to make that 13 senior to GOs, which are, in turn, senior to everything else.
14 I think that is just not consistent with common sense and 15 obvious intent of the framers.

16 THE COURT: Your bondholder clients who bought after 17 COFINA was in existence bought under documentation that said 18 and, by the way, on this COFINA stuff it's not going to be 19 available to you. The proceeds of the COFINA bond offerings
20 went to the Commonwealth. And if the Commonwealth legislature 21 did overstep its bounds and do something unconstitutional, why 22 is it the right result that people whose claims are against the 23 Commonwealth get the benefit of the old debt having been paid 24 off with the proceeds of that bond offering and the COFINA 25 bondholders who bought something they thought was secure should

1 be the ones who take the hit.

2 MR. STANCIL: There is, I think, three different 3 points.

4 THE COURT: Probably.

5 MR. STANCIL: No. 1, we are not here today to 6 determine what kind of hit they take. Your Honor has ruled 7 that what kind of post-property claims they may or may not have 8 against the Commonwealth are beyond the scope of this 9 proceeding. That would be my answer if I were allowed to get 10 into it, your Honor. We could talk about what they may have 11 and what they don't have as property. They can't create a 12 power for the legislature by relying on something.

13 To that reliance question,, which I think is the 14 second thing embedded in your Honor's question, what they 15 relied on was a gamble, and the opinion letters they rely on 16 say it's a gamble. They all say, no one knows for sure how 17 this is going to come out. We think you will win. This is not 18 the kind of thing where they have an ironclad assurance. They 19 took this on a bet and betting on something does not make it 20 illegal. Third, your Honor, it is not correct to assume that 21 all of my clients bought after COFINA. There is a legacy GO
22 debt --

23 THE COURT: I said those of your clients who bought
24 after COFINA.

25 MR. STANCIL: Even those who did, your Honor, doesn't

1 change the rights they have under the Constitution. You cannot 2 by a prospectus or even by legislation change the authority of 3 the legislature. It didn't have the power to transfer away 4 their tax revenues.

5 Thank you, your Honor

6 MR. DEPSINS: Your Honor, I'm next. Is it possible to 7 take a short recess?

8 THE COURT: All right. We will resume in 15 minutes.

9 (Recess)

10 THE COURT: Mr. Despins.

11 MR. DESPINS: Good morning, your Honor, Luc Despins 12 from Paul Hastings on behalf of The Official Committee of 13 Unsecured Creditors in its capacity as the Commonwealth agent
14 in the Commonwealth COFINA dispute.

15 Your Honor, I will address the nonconstitutional 16 issues that are raised in the summary judgment briefing. If 17 the time permits, Mr. Bliss, my partner, will address the 18 balanced budget clause.

19 First, a bit of background. It's important to 20 understand that what's at stake here is billions of dollars of 21 future SUT revenues, and that goes on until at least 2057, if 22 not longer. That's another thing to understand. There is no 23 time limit to this. It goes on until the bonds are paid in 24 full.

25 It's very clear from a bunch of things that I will

1 describe in a second that at the time this law was formulated, 2 proposed, that the GDB and its advisors who were really 3 drafting this were struggling mightily to deal with the 4 constitutional issues raised by this structure.

5 The COFINA statute is really an attempt to reconcile
6 goals that cannot be reconciled. On the one hand, they wanted 7 to sell bonds badly. They were running out of cash. They 8 needed to sell bonds and the only way to really sell bonds was 9 to make or attempt to make this as remote from the Commonwealth
10 as possible. At the same time, however, they knew that GOs 11 would complain about this, so they attempted to address the 12 GO's future concerns regarding the constitutionality.

13 So they created an entity called COFINA that is 14 purportedly independent of the Commonwealth. They said, create 15 this. It's independent. Does it float in the ether, how does 16 it work? Well, somebody said, it's attached to the GDB, 17 whatever that means. And then they say, well, who is going to 18 run this entity? They said, well, the directors of GDB will be 19 the directors of COFINA. But of course the directors of GDB 20 are appointed by the governor. So at the end of the day the 21 governor controls the entire structure.

22 And they drafted language that purports to transfer 23 SUT revenues, including future SUT revenues, until the bonds 24 are paid. As we show in our papers, the language is not as 25 clear as the other side would want it to be. I will address

1 that in a minute, your Honor.

2 But the drafter also added a provision stating that 3 Act 91 shall not be interpreted or applied in a manner that 4 would undermine the power of the legislature to impose and 5 collect taxes. Of course, implicit in that, if you have the 6 power to impose and collect, you have the power to not impose 7 or impose less or substitutive a tax. That's why they had to 8 add this provision, which we called the "turning off the tap"
9 provision that I will describe in a second.

10 In addition to this language, he put in language 11 purporting to render the SUT revenue unavailable to the 12 Commonwealth. But then they also added a provision saying that 13 nothing in the statute shall be interpreted in a manner that 14 would undermine the rights of the GO bondholders. Go figure 15 what they were trying to do other than trying to appease the 16 bondholders somehow so they could point to a section that says, 17 don't worry, this cannot be interpreted in a way that affects 18 you. Honestly, it did.

19 Obviously, not all these provisions are consistent.
20 There is a push and a pull going on in that statute and that 21 really we call it at the office this Frankenstein statute 22 because it is a compromise where a lot of things could not be 23 compromised. They attempted to serve two masters and they 24 didn't serve either of them well. That's the first point.

25 The second point is that the Court needs to confront

1 the fact that Act 91 is not a law that deals generally with a 2 regulation of conduct like highway act or with property
3 interests generally, like a statute of fraud or something like 4 that. It is a special purpose law that created a financing 5 structure solely to effectuate this transaction through the 6 government and the bondholders. This is a pure special-purpose 7 statute only to achieve this commercial financing transaction.
8 Therefore, Act 91 is not somehow immune from the Court looking 9 at the entirety of the statute, and we are going to go through 10 that and the same time looking at the substance, economic 11 realities of the transaction that is reflected in the statute 12 and concluding that what was created here was, at best, for the 13 COFINA side of the house a financing.

14 THE COURT: The legislature has the power to pass laws 15 and, as you say, it passes different types of laws. And the 16 general principle of statutory construction is that you apply 17 the language of the statute that the legislature used. Are you 18 saying that this type of statute is entitled to less respect or 19 less deference in that way just because the legislature was 20 making something really special?

21 MR. DEPSINS: No. I think the point is that -- and we 22 will get to that in a minute. In the bankruptcy context it's 23 important to not be stuck on labels. We have look at the 24 entire statute. And I think we are going to go through that 25 and I think we are happy to start working on the four corners

1 of the statute and show you how it leads to absurd results if 2 their interpretation of the statute is adopted.

3 The point I wanted to make is that if statutes 4 governing bond issuance was somewhat immune from a review of 5 what is happening there, that would be kind of a nifty trick.
6 Let's use this example. Your Honor knows me enough at this 7 point that I often use examples that are exaggerated to make a 8 point. This is one of them. The point is that let's assume a 9 municipality wanted to borrow money now. No ownership issue.
10 It's a clear loan, secured by a facility that a municipality 11 owns. Let's assume that that statute that authorizes this 12 said, in the event of a bankruptcy of this municipality, this 13 collateral shall be the property of the bondholders. Would the 14 court say, well, that settles it, I guess we can go home? We 15 have the answer in the statute. The answer to the question is 16 to answer it of course not. And that is an extreme example.

17 Let me give you a closer example. In a case that we 18 don't cite in our papers, but that we circulated to our 19 colleagues yesterday. The case of Orange County, which the 20 cite is 191 B.R. 1005. The Court was confronted with the 21 following fact pattern. Orange County had to receive funds 22 from other governmental entities in California. Actually, 23 these entities had to give money to Orange County so it could 24 pool the resources and invest it with some brokerage firm, and 25 they did that.

1 And when they filed for bankruptcy, the argument was 2 made by Orange County that, well, these funds were commingled.
3 There is some of my money, there is some of your money. It's 4 all in a pot and you are an unsecured creditor, speaking of the 5 other entities at this point.

6 The argument that was raised, your Honor, is that a 7 law had been passed, the very clear law in California that said 8 that if a public entity was required by law to deposit funds in 9 a county treasury, like Orange County, when it makes a deposit, 10 those funds shall be deemed to be held in trust by the county.
11 The funds shall not be deemed funds or assets of the county and 12 the relationship of the depositing entity or public official in 13 the county shall not be one of debtor creditor. Again, very 14 clear statute. Sounds almost like COFINA.

15 Of course, the Court, in looking at this, the 16 bankruptcy court said, you must be kidding me. We are not 17 going to allow states to define the priorities in the 18 bankruptcy case in the court that said that basically this 19 statute would be ignored if it led to the result that these 20 other government entities did not have to jump through the 21 hoops that other creditors would have to jump through in a 22 bankruptcy case.

23 So this is really what we are saying, your Honor, is 24 that when the Court applies a similar standard, including the 25 standards that have been applied in the First Circuit, in

1 looking beyond the labels and the beyond the substance, the 2 Court will conclude that, at most, this is a secured financing;
3 again, at most from the point of view from the COFINA side.
4 That means that the SUT is owned by the Commonwealth.

5 To use an overused expression. If it quacks a 6 financing and walks like a financing, it is a financing.

7 THE COURT: What Commonwealth obligation is secured by 8 the pledged SUT? What is the transaction that's being secured?
9 Because you have a payoff of the Commonwealth debt that was 10 outstanding at the time and then there is a relationship 11 between COFINA and the bondholders. Are you piercing the 12 COFINA veil? What are you doing?

13 MR. DEPSINS: I think that's addressed in our brief
14 and I don't have all the details committed to memory.

15 THE COURT: Neither do I. That's why I'm asking.

16 MR. DEPSINS: There is at least two theories and one 17 of them is that this is a dry pledge, essentially, is that we 18 are pledging our SUT to obtain the money that was used to pay 19 our debts. That's all addressed in the opening brief, and I'll 20 address that when I do the reply, your Honor.

21 Basically, going back to the statute, the only 22 sensible reading of the statute is that the transfer occurs 23 when the color TV, if you will, is sold and the tax is 24 collected.

25 There are many reasons for that. One is, that's the 1 earliest. Practically, our position is that this needs to 2 happen only when the tax fee is collected and it's put in the 3 account. The reason for that is that what happens if the 4 merchant goes bankrupt or doesn't pay? Under the statute, if 5 it were to happen at the moment of sale, that property would be 6 deemed owned by COFINA. It makes no sense. It's only when the 7 money is put in the account.

8 THE COURT: Which account?

9 MR. DEPSINS: Until it hits the pure COFINA account, I
10 don't think there is a transfer, your Honor, to COFINA. You 11 know, and you probably saw this from the Banco Popular 12 declaration, in fact, all the funds, the collected SUT, go 13 first through an account today that is the name of the 14 Commonwealth, and that started a few years ago.

15 THE COURT: I've read that declaration. But certainly 16 in the real property context, even with bank accounts and 17 community property, there is a concept that's respected in law 18 of an undivided interest in a pooled asset or a jointly owned 19 asset. Why isn't COFINA in there for at least whatever it is, 20 5 percent or 3 and a half percent, at the time of collection of 21 the 100 percent of the tax? Why does it have to wait to be 22 separated out?

23 MR. DEPSINS: The short answer, your Honor, is, we are 24 not relying on that fact, meaning it's a fact that shows that 25 we continue to have control. But we are not relying on the

1 mere deposit of an account to say that the ownership doesn't 2 pass through. It's really one of the factors to show that we 3 continue to have complete control over the SUT tax collection 4 process.

5 But, your Honor, as you stated when the COFINA side 6 was arguing, the concept that you can transfer ownership of an 7 asset that doesn't exist doesn't work, and I want to give you 8 some precise example in this statute of how it leads to absurd 9 results.

10 Remember that there is a dispute between the 11 Commonwealth side and the COFINA side as to whether there is an 12 obligation if you turn off the tap, meaning the SUT tap, to 13 provide substitutive collateral. You have heard about this 14 before. Let's assume that they are correct. We don't believe 15 they are, and I'll go through that in a minute. Let's assume 16 they are correct. You know that this substitutive collateral 17 must be deposited in the account, in the COFINA account. And 18 their argument on the statute, the linchpin of the statute is, 19 anything that must be deposited in that account is owned by 20 COFINA going back to 2007.

21 I want to make sure we go granular on this. You have 22 other collateral. Let's call it gold to make it easy that we 23 want to substitutive collateral. We have to. Apparently, the 24 Court had ruled that it's required if you want to turn off the 25 tap. Putting that aside, we assume the most favorable facts to 1 them. That goal, if you will, would have been deemed owned by 2 the COFINA side since 2007. That makes no sense whatsoever.

3 THE COURT: You are saying that they would be saying 4 that not only the revenues but also anything that could 5 potentially be substituted or might be substituted in the 6 future is owned as of 2007, so there is too much.

7 MR. DEPSINS: That's my point. It leads to an absurd
8 result. Their hook in the statute is what must be deposited.
9 Whatever must be deposited in the account, their theory is it's 10 owned by COFINA from day one. That is their theory and they 11 are embracing it completely.

12 In the example I just gave you, it makes no sense 13 whatsoever. This may have come from resources that have come 14 up elsewhere and, all of a sudden, it's deemed owned back to 15 2007. It makes no sense.

16 Let me give you another example on how it leads to 17 absurd results, their interpretation of the statute. You know 18 that there is a topping-up requirement that if sales and use 19 tax are not sufficient in any given year to pay the debt 20 service on the bonds, the Commonwealth must make that up. It's 21 a topping-up mechanism.

22 Same thing. This is coming from the Commonwealth's
23 own seats, its own SUT. Under that theory, that SUT that it 24 must now transfer is deemed owned retroactively to 2007. There 25 is a lot that legislatures can put in and indeed transferring

1 and all that. It makes no sense, your Honor. These are just 2 two examples of how this leads to an absurd result, if their 3 interpretation is correct.

4 Let's assume for a second that they are right on 5 everything, meaning that you could transfer the tax, that the 6 statute did that, that my arguments are rejected. Actually 7 this argument that they have, by the way, which is nowhere in 8 the statute, that they have a pledge or a security interest or 9 an ownership right in, quote, the right to receive, you will 10 find that nowhere in the statute.

11 Let's assume they are right on that. The point is 12 that that was not transferred. That ownership was not 13 transferred. Why? Because the essence of this transaction, 14 your Honor, is that there is no absolute transfer. And, yes, 15 we are looking at true sale cases. You might say, I can do 16 that in the statute.

17 The point is, we have made that point. Other courts 18 have looked at the statutory scheme, have looked at it and 19 said, that's a contractual relationship, and we are going to 20 apply regular bankruptcy principles to that contractual 21 relationship. The Seven Counties case. In that case the Court 22 found that the statutory scheme created an executory contract 23 which could be rejected. By the way, that's one of our 24 out-of-scope claims. We are not going to argue it. But I want 25 to make sure you recall that.

1 The point there is that it is OK, and they cite no
2 case for the proposition. Their proposition is that when you 3 have a statute you cannot apply these principles at all. So if 4 you have a statute that governs the contractual relationship 5 between parties and the example I gave, it's a clear loan. If 6 it quacks like a loan, it walks like a loan, it's a clear loan, 7 but the statute says it's owned by the other party, that you 8 need to end your inquiry there. We don't believe that. We 9 don't believe there is any case that says that. Then if you 10 look at the merits of the argument, they don't even try to 11 tackle us on that or touch us on that.

12 THE COURT: I'm sorry. This may seem elementary to 13 you or elemental, but I'd like to go back to, if it's a loan 14 and we have not blown COFINA into the ether via the 15 constitutional arguments, not saying that won't happen, but 16 hasn't happened yet, who is the borrower? Who is the lender, 17 since COFINA is there right now and the Commonwealth has got 18 all the money it's going to get out of this --

19 MR. DEPSINS: The Commonwealth, either through a dry 20 pledge or otherwise, is a borrower and it pledged its SUT for 21 that loan. That's addressed in our opening brief and I'll 22 address that when we go -- I'll use my time on reply to address 23 that because I know that there are two separate theories under 24 which that works.

25 But the point, your Honor, is that if you look at the 1 statute, the risk, was there an absolute transfer? There was 2 not. Why? Because of that topping-up mechanism. When you 3 sell an asset, you don't remain liable to pay the difference to 4 the lender. It's a sale. It shows that there is no sale here 5 because we remain liable to make up the difference.

6 THE COURT: Shouldn't there be a sale and then a bonus 7 contractual undertaking? Why does it have to invalidate all of 8 the sale?

9 MR. DEPSINS: I am not sure I understand fully.

10 THE COURT: Why can't there be absolute transfer of 11 the right to the revenues and, in addition, a payment of 12 consideration for some contractual undertaking of the 13 Commonwealth to come in, not committing its full faith and 14 credit, but in some other capacity to do this topping up if 15 there is a shortfall?

16 MR. DEPSINS: It's inconsistent with an outright
17 transfer because it's not only the topping up, your Honor.
18 It's the fact that we get it back once they get paid, which is 19 another indicia, clear indicia that it's not a sale.

20 THE COURT: It says that COFINA can give it back once 21 it doesn't need it anymore. I don't think the statute says
22 COFINA has to give it back.

23 MR. DEPSINS: Yes, your Honor. That's technically 24 correct. But it also says that COFINA has only one role in 25 life, which is to pay the bonds. It cannot go to Vegas and

1 spend that money. And, second, that's why it's important, the 2 governor controls this anyway. Let's assume the bonds have all 3 been paid. There is no way the Commonwealth is going to keep 4 transferring SUT because there is no purpose in the life of 5 COFINA other than to pay the bonds. It's a special purpose
6 entity and it can only use the money to pay the bonds or pay 7 its understood expenses. That's not an issue. And, therefore,
8 at the end of the day, you see the full picture here. The SUT
9 is just collateral for a loan. That's all it is because COFINA 10 cannot get an upside of that. Let's assume that you only have 11 to transfer SUT until 2055 to pay the bonds in full. There is 12 no way that the SUT will continue to be paid in 2056 and 2057
13 because COFINA has no role, no existence other than to pay the 14 bonds, and the governor controls it anyway. So it's really a 15 nonissue. The point is that shows that the substance of this 16 is that it's a loan.

17 Your Honor, I certainly resent the fact that they 18 argue this is outrageous. They gave the money. Of course they 19 gave the money. In bankruptcy, tons of people have given money 20 and have not recovered on those loans.

21 More importantly, your Honor, is that it was well 22 known to everyone. They rolled the dice on this. I want to be 23 very clear about this. That's all in our brief, so I won't 24 spend a lot of time.

25 But in 2006, there was a memo from the Fiddler law

1 firm that was part of the legislative history that was in that 2 file and that basically says, the bondholders must know that 3 the contractual obligation to them is subject to the fact that 4 the legislature can eliminate the sales tax. We can turn off 5 the tap. The bondholders need to know that.

6 By the way, that memo doesn't say, but don't worry,
7 you will get substitutive collateral. It's completely silent 8 on that. And we cite four or five of these, your Honor, in our 9 brief, and we also cite to the official statement. This is the 10 prospectus that was used to sell the COFINA bonds. It says:
11 The legislative assembly may amend, modify, or repeal act No.
12 117. That's the statute that imposes the SUT. And that's 13 listed not in a vacuum somewhere; it's listed under risk 14 factors, your Honor, and this is all in our brief. These are 15 exhibits to our brief.

16 The point is, everyone knew this. Nixon Peabody in 17 its opinion says: Thus, the legislature is free at any time to 18 reduce the rate of sales and use tax or eliminate it entirely.
19 The opinion goes on to say, this has been clearly disclosed to 20 bondholders. I am not going to go through all of them, but 21 they all say, the bondholders can end up -- if this happens, 22 they will end up with zero. None of these memos say, oh, by 23 the way, you will get substitutive collateral.

24 Frankly, I have to say, I didn't follow at all the 25 argument about why the substitutive collateral is required. We

1 addressed that in our brief extensively. But the word such 2 substitutive collateral obviously refers to the second part of 3 the proviso, not the first part.

4 And if that were not clear enough, your Honor, in the 5 statements, the official statements of the COFINA bond
6 offering -- we cited this at docket 347-18, Exhibit 10, page 7 22 -- they separated the two parts of the proviso so they put a 8 one little I and a two little I. One little I we can reduce or 9 repeal, whatever the language is, or, comma, two little I,
10 provide substitutive collateral, which makes it crystal clear 11 that the intent at that time was that these provisions had to 12 be read in the disjunctive.

13 THE COURT: In determining ownership of the SUT for 14 purposes of this proceeding and my scope order, do I need to 15 resolve that issue with respect to the consequences of 16 elimination or reduction of the SUT? And I am hereby inviting 17 comment from COFINA about this on rebuttal, but first I'll ask 18 you.

19 MR. DEPSINS: It is part of the crux of our argument 20 that the fact that you can do this, you can just turn off the 21 tap, it's one of the crux of our argument as to why there is no 22 ownership here, because you can't have ownership in something 23 that has some sales and use tax that will occur in 2040 when 24 the legislature could say in 2020, we are turning off the tap.
25 That makes no sense. Whether you have to decide, whether that

1 can be done with any consequence, I'd like to reflect on that 2 for a few minutes, and I'll come back and I'll reply to address 3 that point.

4 The point, though, your Honor, as I made it before -- 5 actually this one I didn't make. Let's assume that they are 6 right, that you need to provide substitutive collateral. What 7 does that say about ownership? I've already covered that.
8 It's impossible for something that we don't even know what a 9 substitutive collateral is. Could be gold, could be other 10 things, new tax, whatever. We don't know what it is. That 11 would be deemed to be owned because it must be deposited in the 12 account. That's the operative words. They would be deemed to 13 be owned back in 2007.

14 Then they say, this is bootstrapping to the extreme.
15 Hey, if you are doing that, you will have a constitutional 16 takings claim. The point is, we cite cases in our brief that 17 basically say, if the statute that grants you a right expressly 18 says, I can take it away from you, that's the end of the 19 inquiry. There is no constitutional taking. There is no --

20 THE COURT: I'm sorry. We need to stop for a minute 21 because apparently the connection in Puerto Rico has gotten 22 disturbed. Sorry. You can collect your thoughts for a minute.
23 We are stopping the clock to find out what's going on.

24 (Pause)

25 THE COURT: You may continue.

1 MR. DEPSINS: Your Honor, their interpretation leads 2 to absurd results, and we believe that that is why the Court 3 should find that the transfer only occurs when the fund gets 4 into the account. Otherwise, you can have this concept, which 5 is unknown in any country, of floating ownership. It's not a 6 floating lien. It's floating ownership. Basically, they have 7 a lien against any asset that is required to pay them and that 8 can't be the law.

9 The next item I want to talk about is the labels
10 issue, the fact that when territory law -- because I might not 11 going to say state law -- the territory law uses labels, that's 12 not dispositive in a bankruptcy context. And the argument that 13 they make is that that can't be because all the cases you are 14 citing refer to property of the estate. That has to be so 15 wrong.

16 First, it's wrong because you will see in the Orange 17 County case the Court dispatched that because in chapter 9, 18 same thing as PROMESA, there is no property of the estate 19 concept, and the Court said, there is no way that's 20 controlling.

21 But more importantly, the reason why there is no 22 property of the estate is because if you had property of the 23 estate there would be a section of the code, 363, that would 24 say the debtor cannot use property outside your course of 25 business without your Honor's permission. That's why there is 1 no property of the estate.

2 The PROMESA statute in 301 says property of the estate 3 in a bankruptcy code shall be substituted for property of the 4 debtor, and there are various provisions of the bankruptcy code
5 that apply. For example, Section 1123(a)(5) says that a plan
6 must deal with property of the estate. Of course in our case 7 that means property of the debtor.

8 There is no evidence anywhere that Congress, when it 9 deleted the concept of property estate in municipal cases or in 10 the PROMESA statute, intended for these governments to have 11 less rights than a corporate debtor as to what is property.
12 There is no evidence on that whatsoever. So that argument 13 needs to be rejected.

14 On the meat of the matter, the First Circuit and many 15 other courts have said, when dealing with property of the 16 estate, that we shall not be detained or we shall not be 17 controlled by labels used by state statutes. For example, if 18 the state statute says this asset is owned by the government 19 because it's a privilege, it's not a property interest, courts 20 have said no. It has value. It can be sold. It's proper in 21 bankruptcy. And you've got the Ground Round case. You've got 22 the Third Circuit case in Christburger. You have several other 23 cases that say that. The First Circuit in Gull Air. And they 24 all say that, your Honor. And that's what we are asking the 25 Court to do, which is to look at what really is going on in the 1 statute and determine that and not be blinded by the fact that 2 there is one section of the statute that says, we hereby 3 transfer. By the way, we are not waiving arguments as to why 4 that language doesn't do it for them. That's in all our 5 briefs.

6 In the couple of points I'd like to make before 7 concluding, your Honor, is, it's really the only legally 8 possible interpretation of the statute that the transfer cannot 9 occur in 2007 because the Commonwealth, who is the collecting 10 party here, has no right under Commonwealth tax law to collect 11 the tax until the transaction has occurred. That's in our 12 brief.

13 Given that, how can the Commonwealth transfer rights 14 into something that it has no rights in itself? It can only 15 start doing that when the transaction has occurred, unless they 16 were to pledge their right to receive, which the statute 17 doesn't do and also it couldn't do -- not pledged. Transfer 18 ownership of the right to receive because that would violate 19 the Constitution.

20 Therefore, your Honor, for these reasons, we believe 21 that the summary judgment should be granted. I just want to 22 check for two seconds, your Honor.

23 THE COURT: After you deal with that, I have another 24 question.

25 MR. DEPSINS: Basically it's on page 18 of our brief,

1 the answer to the question. I'll address that more fully 2 during the rebuttal.

3 You had a question, your Honor.

4 THE COURT: Yes. You've criticized the substitution
5 theories and the concept as undermining the notion of a 6 transfer of property and also takings inconsistent with the 7 constitutional structure. Mr. Yanez said, well, maybe at the 8 point of substitution, maybe it's damages for conversion, maybe 9 it's damages for breach of contract, maybe it's compensation 10 for a taking. But because it could be any of those three 11 things it's not inconsistent with the notion that there was 12 actual ownership of the taxes for which it was substituted.

13 Do you have some views on that conceptually and on the 14 specifics of it that you would like to share?

15 MR. DEPSINS: I just don't see how there can be any 16 claim of taking conversion and all that when the contract says, 17 I'm giving you that right. And what that right is, we will put 18 aside for a second and I can take it away from you at any time 19 for any reason.

20 The courts are pretty clear on the constitutional 21 takings claim that you have no takings claim in such a context.
22 They rebut that by citing cases where the Court has said, the 23 mere fact that the state has established a process for taking 24 doesn't mean that it can take away the right. That's not what 25 we are dealing with. The operative statute says, you don't

1 have that right if I say so. It is clear. I don't see how 2 they could have any claim. If they had a claim for that, we 3 will deal with that in part 2. Not that we are looking forward 4 to that, but the point is, it shouldn't drive the decision of 5 whether there is ownership here.

6 THE COURT: Thank you.

7 MR. DEPSINS: Thank you.

8 THE COURT: Mr. Levin for 12 minutes.

9 MR. LEVIN: Good afternoon, your Honor, if it please 10 the Court, Richard Levin, Jenner & Block, for the Official 11 Committee of Retirees.

12 Your Honor, given only limited time, so I am not going 13 to review our entire argument. I would simply like to point to 14 a few specific matters in our papers and respond to my 15 questions that the Court might have.

16 The COFINA parties' principal argument, your Honor, is 17 the legislature says so and that ends the debate. Well, as the 18 Commonwealth agent and GOs have shown, the legislature didn't 19 quite say so, and we cover this in our brief. The Enabling Act
20 itself withholds the commitment that the COFINA parties argue, 21 and the legislature has, in fact, amended the statute several 22 times in a way that is inconsistent with the full transfer 23 argument. We described that in our motion papers at 3 through 24 8 and 20 through 21. In other words, we need to watch what the 25 legislature does, not what it says, and here what it did was 1 not transfer the revenues.

2 THE COURT: Give me a couple of examples because, as I
3 said, unfortunately, I don't have a complete photographic 4 memory of pages 3 through 8 and --

5 MR. LEVIN: Mr. Despins had already described how 6 there was already rights withheld. But in 2013, rights were 7 granted and then taken back. In 2007, actually, the transfer 8 was redone because they felt the original transfer was somehow 9 inadequate or improper. They didn't want it to go the way they 10 said it did, so they moved it to a different entity.

11 THE COURT: Thank you. Those are some examples.

12 MR. LEVIN: They are laid out in our brief in some 13 detail.

14 In addition, the legislation must be interpreted in 15 light of the general principles of Puerto Rico law set forth in 16 Puerto Rico civil code, as we show in our motion. Again, I'll 17 give you page references for future review since time here is 18 limited. That's pages 12 through 16 and reply brief at 5 19 through 6.

20 The purported transfer has all of the attributes under 21 the civil code of a pledge, not of a sale. Your Honor asked 22 Mr. Despins, what obligation is the pledge securing? Well, the 23 statute, Act 91, says that COFINA will transfer the bond 24 proceeds to pay off the extra constitutional debt and, in 25 exchange, the Commonwealth will transfer the SUT until such

1 time as the COFINA bonds are paid off, and then the 2 Commonwealth -- it doesn't specifically say the Commonwealth 3 may recover them. What it says is the negative. The 4 Commonwealth may not take them back until the bonds are paid 5 off. So it looks like the Commonwealth has an obligation to 6 COFINA to give it enough money to pay off the COFINA loans in 7 exchange for COFINA having paid off the extra constitutional 8 debt of the Commonwealth and the Commonwealth they recover is 9 collateral after those COFINA bonds are paid off.

10 Of course, the legislative assembly may amend the 11 civil code and render it inapplicable, but in this case it 12 didn't. All of the attributes look like the pledge in the 13 civil code.

14 Now, even if the Enabling Act intended to transfer 15 future SUT to COFINA, that transfer is unenforceable in this 16 Title III case. So the future SUT remains property of the 17 Commonwealth for two principal reasons.

18 The first reason is the bankruptcy law. As has been 19 discussed, Congress has plenary authority over Puerto Rico 20 under the territory clause. PROMESA is inactive under the 21 territory clause. It says so specifically and Title III is a 22 bankruptcy statute. It incorporates large portions of the 23 bankruptcy law.

24 There is no issue of state sovereignty or of federal 25 law overriding the law of a sovereign state in a federal dual

1 sovereignty system. This is not a dual sovereignty system 2 here, so congressional dictates are viewed, one as against the 3 other, not as against deference to state sovereignty.

4 But even in those cases where a state statute is 5 involved, Congress can, under the bankruptcy code, under the 6 bankruptcy power, override a transfer that would be valid and 7 enforceable under state law.

8 THE COURT: As Mr. Kirpalani pointed out, PROMESA, 9 this congressional statute, does very specifically speak to 10 respecting territory law. It doesn't expressly say that all 11 territory law and labels are out the window. So I'm hoping 12 that you are going to acknowledge and sort of reconcile that 13 aspect of this particular statute in this argument.

14 MR. LEVIN: Yes, your Honor, it does say that. Just 15 as Congress and the Supreme Court have said that state law
16 typically governs in bankruptcy cases. But even the lead 17 Supreme Court case on that, Butner, says state law governs 18 property rights unless some federal interest requires a 19 different result.

20 And in this case there is a very clear federal 21 interest, the fresh start, which I know Mr. Mayer has said
22 nowhere it is in the statute. It's nowhere in the bankruptcy
23 code either. But it is in perhaps the leading Supreme Court 24 case on bankruptcy and the discharge and it is important and 25 that is Local Loan v. Hunt. In that case, state law expressly

1 preserved the property right of the transfer of future wages of 2 the wage earner who was in bankruptcy, just as the COFINA 3 parties argue that the COFINA Enabling Act does here, but 4 against the contention that the Court was bound to follow the 5 Illinois decisions since the question of an existence of the 6 lien depended on Illinois law.

7 The Supreme Court ruled that contention, quote, is 8 precluded by the clear and unmistakable policy of the 9 Bankruptcy Act. And the Court rejected the Illinois decisions, 10 quote, as being destructive of the purpose and spirit of the 11 Bankruptcy Act, and that is a principle that Congress has 12 embodied in all bankruptcy legislation since that time in 1934.

13 This is not the argument that one policy or the other 14 policy is the better policy. This is an argument from the core 15 of the bankruptcy law which Congress adopted in Title III of 16 PROMESA.

17 Now, I think it was Mr. Kirpalani who said, well, that 18 that's saying the fresh start for Commonwealth is more 19 important for fresh start for COFINA. I'm not saying that at 20 all. COFINA's fresh start doesn't provide a basis for 21 overriding applicable law or denying the common law for fresh
22 start.

23 The best way to illustrate this is let's assume when 24 Mr. Hunt was going through the bankruptcy in the 1930s, the 25 Local Loan company was as well. I don't think the Supreme

1 Court would have countenanced an argument that says, because 2 Local Loan is going through bankruptcy, the wage assignment is 3 effective against Mr. Hunt because Local Loan needs it for its 4 fresh start. That is gathering property into the estate where 5 the fresh start is about the discharge and the release from 6 commitments that have been made.

7 Your Honor, if creditors could buy or a financing 8 agency could buy all of a municipality's taxes, municipal 9 bankruptcy would simply become unavailable. As we show when 10 tracing the history of the 1988 municipal bankruptcy amendments 11 which carved out only special remedy bonds, only very limited 12 exception, Congress has not permitted the sale of future
13 reference of a municipality to stand up against a bankruptcy 14 petition or bankruptcy law.

15 The second reason, your Honor, I said that the 16 transfer would be unenforceable is the taxing power itself.
17 The taxing power is so central to the nature of government that 18 even without an express constitutional reprovision it cannot be 19 bartered or sold. Irrevocably transferring future taxes does 20 that. The Supreme Court said as much in 1942, Justice 21 Frankfurter in the case of Faitoute Iron & Steel v. Asbury
22 Park. It was not based on any state constitutional provision 23 that the Supreme Court ruled but on the very nature of 24 government. Just as Frankfurter said, quote, the principal 25 asset of a municipal is its taxing power and that, unlike an

1 asset of a private corporation or, I might add, an airport,
2 cannot be available for distribution.

3 THE COURT: But the Commonwealth hasn't given away its 4 taxing power. It's given away particular tax revenues and it 5 still has the ability to impose new taxes, to raise taxes, to 6 lower taxes, to do things with taxes. How is this a surrender 7 of the taxing power?

8 MR. LEVIN: First, as Justice Frankfurter also 9 recognized, the taxing power is not unlimited. There is a 10 point at which taxes return less than the rate would imply 11 because people simply can't pay that. We saw that in the Great 12 Depression and that's why Congress enacted Chapter 9 to begin 13 with.

14 In any event, if the COFINA parties are correct, that 15 the tax cannot be modified without substituting something of 16 equal or greater value, then the Commonwealth has given away 17 that much of the taxing power. It has surrendered to the 18 COFINA parties or to the COFINA entity and said, we can't touch 19 it; or if you do, we have to replace it with some other tax, 20 and taxing is not unlimited, so it is a surrender.

21 Your Honor, I want to add to that the concept that if 22 the COFINA parties are right, if they are right that no matter
23 what they are entitled to be paid by the SUT, by a substitute 24 tax, by a claim for breach of contract, by a conversion claim, 25 if they are entitled to that money from the Commonwealth, no

1 matter what, then the Commonwealth has pledged its full faith
2 and credit. If the Commonwealth, as they have argued, has not 3 pledged, then they are not entitled to that. We cite the 4 Alabama case, the town of Georgiana, in our reply brief which 5 goes through the mechanics of this, and it makes very clear 6 that principal.

7 That is why we believe, your Honor, that the taxes
8 have not been transferred in the way COFINA argues.

9 THE COURT: Thank you.

10 MR. LEVIN: Thank you, your Honor.

11 THE COURT: We will now turn to the rebuttal
12 arguments. First up to Mr. Yanez for 10 minutes.

13 MR. YANEZ: Thank you, your Honor. For the record, 14 Antonio Yanez on behalf of the COFINA agent.

15 Your Honor, Mr. Friedman, on behalf of National, had 16 five minutes on rebuttal that he has just graciously agreed to 17 cede to me. I think that brings my total to 15.

18 THE COURT: All right.

19 MR. YANEZ: Thank you, Judge.

20 Let me begin with the constitutional arguments. The 21 underlying theme of those arguments which was stated explicitly 22 at different times was that somehow COFINA was taking the 23 Commonwealth's money or the SUT sales tax is the Commonwealth's 24 money. That's wrong, your Honor. It is wrong for the 25 straightforward reason that the pledged sales tax is money that

1 was transferred to COFINA in exchange, again, for $18 billion, 2 $16 billion that became available resources as soon as they 3 were passed over.

4 The General Obligation Bondholders also make the 5 argument that it would be an act of stunning incompetence for 6 the legislator to have left what is described by them as a 7 loophole in the form of a constitutional debt provision that 8 applies to full faith and credit debt but not to nonrecourse
9 debt.

10 A response to that, Judge, is that it's not a 11 loophole. It gives the legislature discretion. There are 12 alternatives. There is full faith and credit debt and there is 13 nonrecourse debt, and it leads to the legislature's discretion 14 how those alternatives are going to be deployed. That is not 15 irrational. It is not a stunning act of competence. It 16 recognizes the centrality of the taxing and spending power in 17 the hands of the legislature. It recognizes the primacy of the 18 legislature with respect to taxation spending and economic 19 matters and is a perfectly rational way to interpret the Puerto 20 Rico Constitution.

21 On that subject, your Honor, in terms of how the 22 analysis should proceed, listening to the General Obligation 23 Bondholders, one would think that the starting point is the 24 available resources clause, the debt priority clause of the 25 Puerto Rico Constitution, that is the first order and that

1 everything else in the Puerto Rico Constitution flows from 2 that.

3 That is exactly backwards, Judge. It's exactly
4 backwards. The starting point is the taxing power. That is a 5 broad power. It is a plenary power and has been recognized to 6 be a plenary power by the Supreme Court of Puerto Rico and that 7 is a power that resides with the legislative assembly.

8 So then the question becomes, given that the 9 legislative assembly possesses this plenary power over 10 taxation, are there specific provisions in the Puerto Rico
11 Constitution that act to override or limit that plenary 12 authority? That's the framework for analysis. We have 13 articulated, all of us on the COFINA side, the reasons that we 14 believe that the specific provisions relied upon here don't act 15 to create such a constraint. I am not going to repeat the 16 entirety of that.

17 I do just want to pause on one point, however, your 18 Honor, and it is this. The General Obligation Bondholders rely 19 upon the legislative history. They say that the legislative 20 history is the place to go for the identification of the 21 available resources clause, the debt priority clause, as a 22 substantive constraint on the power of the legislature.

23 Judge, the materials that they rely upon don't say 24 that the debt priority clause acts as a constraint on the power 25 of the legislature. The materials that they rely upon say that

1 it acts as a constraint on the power of the governor. I'll be 2 specific.

3 The constitutional history that they rely upon,
4 including and principally the history of the Puerto Rico 5 Constitution by Chief Justice Trias Monge, who I think was 6 described as the combination of Hamilton and Madison, what that 7 constitutional history says is that the debt priority clause
8 was adopted to, quote, place in absolute first term and beyond 9 the scope of the power of the governor, of the power of the 10 governor, the payment of interest and the amortization of 11 general obligation debt.

12 The question becomes, why does the governor's power 13 have to be constrained? Isn't it the legislature that 14 establishes what is to be spent and then the governor is 15 required to follow that? The answer to that, Judge, is the 16 dissenting opinion that the General Obligation Bondholders rely 17 on in Presidente de la Cámara v. Gobernador. Again, they rely 18 on that case as articulating a framework within which total 19 resources are estimated at the beginning of the year and then 20 at the end of the year there is consideration of what is 21 available, what actually comes in.

22 What that case describes is in the constitutional 23 budgeting process in Puerto Rico the governor has a line item 24 veto that allows him or her to reduce, eliminate, and 25 reprioritize appropriations. So the purpose of having a

1 constraint on the governor, at least based on the materials
2 that the General Obligation Bondholders rely upon, is so that 3 when the governor exercises his or her line item veto to ensure 4 that that's done in a way that maintains the priority of 5 general obligation debt.

6 The important point, Judge, is that the debt priority 7 clause as a substantive constraint on the legislative 8 assembly's taxing power is not in the legislative history, at 9 least not what is cited or what is relied upon by the General 10 Obligation Bondholders, and it is not, as I have said in the 11 text of the debt priority clause, which should be the main 12 consideration here.

13 Let me talk about evasion, your Honor. The General 14 Obligation Bondholders referred to two cases on the subject of 15 evasion and the fact that a constitutional provision can be 16 evaded, even if its plain terms are not violated. That's not 17 what those cases hold, Judge.

18 Those cases, and I'm talking about Shkurti and I'm 19 talking about Cerajewski, those cases involved constitutional 20 debt limitations that were much more explicit, much more 21 precise, and much more restrictive than what we have at issue
22 here.

23 I will be specific. In the Cerajewski case, there was 24 a debt limit which prohibited borrowing by political 25 corporations, quote, in the aggregate exceeding 2 percent of

1 the value of the property within that corporation. The issue
2 there was whether two corporations could own the same property
3 under that provision and not have it be exceeded.

4 So, too, in the Shkurti case. The provision at issue
5 there said that subject to certain exceptions that don't apply 6 here, quote, no debt whatever shall hereafter be created by or 7 on behalf of the state. No debt whatever shall be created by 8 or on behalf of the state.

9 Contrast that, your Honor, with the debt limitation 10 that's at issue here, which applies, as I've said, only to 11 direct obligations of the Commonwealth for money borrowed 12 directly by the Commonwealth and backed by its full faith and 13 credit. Those cases don't say that a constitutional provision 14 can be evaded where the terms of the Constitution are not 15 violated. They don't stand for that proposition, Judge.

16 Turning then to the subject of the transfer of the 17 pledge to sales tax, Mr. Despina, sort of the baseline approach 18 in his argument. He talked about different considerations. He 19 talked about form versus substance. He talked about labels.
20 He talked about statements in memoranda that may have been 21 included in the legislative record.

22 What he didn't spend as much time, precious little in 23 fact, was on the words of the statute. I am not going to 24 belabor it because I know I have repeated them. But the words 25 matter, Judge. Statutory interpretation, as I have said, and

1 as the First Circuit has said, in Puerto Rico begins and ends
2 with the words of the statute. And the statute here say that 3 there was a transfer and that the pledged sales tax shall be 4 COFINA's property. Judge, the only way to conclude that there 5 was not a transfer or that this is something other than 6 COFINA's property is to ignore those words. That should not be 7 the result. Under the controlling authority here it ought not 8 be.

9 Still with respect to the subject of the transfer, 10 Mr. Despina talked about absurd results, that there would be 11 absurd results if the Court were to conclude that implemented 12 sales taxes that have not yet been collected and had not been 13 collected in 2007 were transferred to COFINA. The underlying 14 premise there, Judge, is there was nothing to transfer. I 15 mentioned this briefly when I was up here last.

16 That premise fails because there was an existing tax 17 that required money to be remitted and the result was that a 18 stream of revenue was created. Your Honor, the only way to 19 conclude that there was nothing to transfer when the sales and 20 use tax was implemented is to accept the fiction that nothing 21 was ever going to be sold in Puerto Rico from that point 22 forward because if something was going to be sold, and I would 23 submit that is a fair assumption, if there were going to be 24 sales, then there were going to be taxes collected and there 25 was going to be, and there was, a new stream of revenue.

1 Mr. Despins says in one of his examples, how can you
2 have you taxes collected on the sale of an item that hasn't yet 3 been sold and where the merchant might or might not exist down 4 the road. The merchant might go bankrupt. The merchant might 5 not be there.

6 Judge, those same types of criticisms can be leveled 7 in every one of the municipal finance situations that we have 8 cited to and, for that matter, in every one of the commercial 9 situations that we have cited to. If I sell a stream of rent 10 to someone with respect to a building that has 10 apartments in 11 it, maybe all of those apartments are going to be sold, and 12 that's what my buyer is going to get, or are going to be 13 rented. Maybe fewer than all of them are going to be rented.
14 Maybe one of them or two of them or three of them are going to 15 be harmed in some way. Rents might go up. Rents might go 16 down. There are a million variables.

17 If the point is that future revenues can be subject to 18 variables, then we will agree with that. But if the point is 19 that the fact that future revenues being subject to variables
20 somehow makes them incapable of being transferred, that point 21 is contradicted, your Honor, and it's contradicted by case 22 after case after case.

23 And on this point, Judge, I would like to focus, too, 24 on the specific cases that the Commonwealth agent in particular 25 relies upon. Judge, their cases are about situations where a

1 court held that corn that has not yet been planted can't be 2 transferred, or where you've got a railroad car that isn't 3 owned by the seller at the time of the sale, whether that was 4 transferred, too. Those are very different situations from 5 what we are dealing with here, your Honor.

6 THE COURT: But you do have a statute here in Puerto 7 Rico that says, at least for tax purposes, the Commonwealth 8 isn't the owner of the sales tax revenues until they are 9 collected. In 2007, the sales tax revenues that are being 10 collected in 2018 clearly hadn't been collected. So if there 11 is a transfer, how could it be more than an expectation or a 12 transfer of something when the thing that becomes concrete?

13 MR. YANEZ: Your Honor, so, too, in my rent example I, 14 as the owner of the apartment building, won't, I suppose, in 15 some sense, own the rent payable next month or the month after 16 until it's handed over to me. Courts recognize that in 17 addition to the individual instances in which payments are 18 made, those individual instances, together, add up to a stream 19 of revenue that is an asset in itself that can be transferred.

20 THE COURT: Is there a significance in the 21 constitutional prohibition on the transfer of the right to go 22 and collect? Couldn't the buyer with the right to the rental 23 stream, either directly in that contract or, if things go 24 south, go and displace the landlord as the collector of the 25 rents and use some self-help there? It seems to me that the

1 Constitution says that the Commonwealth can't let somebody else 2 do that, can't let COFINA go and do that. Is that a material 3 difference?

4 MR. YANEZ: I don't believe it is, your Honor. And 5 this goes back to an answer that I at least meant to give 6 earlier if I didn't. That is that the antisurrender provisions
7 of the Puerto Rico Constitution don't operate at sort of fine
8 levels that are being conveyed here. What those provisions 9 mean is that the power to tax cannot be infringed by other 10 branches of the government.

11 In terms of the mechanics of the use, the exercise of 12 the power to tax, including the exercise of that power through 13 the transfer of a stream, I think that the Commonwealth would 14 have some leeway there, but I also think that fundamentally 15 collection doesn't matter. The reason that collection doesn't 16 matter is that it is possible to collect something that is 17 owned by and has been transferred to someone else. That's what 18 happened here, Judge.

19 I also want to speak to the notion that this is 20 somehow, if one looks through the substance --

21 THE COURT: I am going to give you a minute and 30
22 seconds to do that because you're in overtime now, and then I 23 am going to have another question for you as well.

24 MR. YANEZ: Thank you, Judge.

25 I can be very quick on whether it's financing. It's

1 not. The reason it's not is that the words of the statute
2 matter. Words of the statute are transfer of property of 3 COFINA. They don't talk about it being a financing. They 4 don't talk about liens. They don't talk about anything other 5 than ownership. And we would submit, Judge, that the terms of 6 the statute should be respected here.

7 Your Honor also asked earlier and invited us to 8 comment on whether the Court needs to resolve the question of 9 substitution in connection with these proceedings. I can speak 10 to that or hold off and answer your Honor's question.

11 THE COURT: You can speak to that very briefly.

12 MR. YANEZ: My answer is that the Court need not 13 resolve the question of substitution because it doesn't detract 14 from the fundamental command of the statute.

15 THE COURT: Now, the question that I want to ask you 16 is to respond to Mr. Despina's argument that your 2007 theory, 17 once you take into account the mandate to pay over substituted 18 assets, whether that's a forever thing or a particular 19 situational thing, makes your ownership concept completely 20 aspecific and quoting, therefore, absurd that you have a right 21 to the revenues, you have a right to anything that might be 22 substituted by the revenues, and you own it all 20 years before 23 any of it ever happens.

24 Is there a flaw in that reasoning?

25 MR. YANEZ: There is, Judge. And the flaw is that we

1 have not asserted that COFINA owns anything that might be 2 substituted for the pledge sales tax.

3 THE COURT: Thank you.

4 MR. YANEZ: Thank you, your Honor.

5 THE COURT: Mr. Kirpalani.

6 MR. KIRPALANI: Thank you, your Honor. I wish it said 7 15 minutes, but it's going down to five.

8 For the record, Susheel Kirpalani from Quinn Emanuel.
9 I am going to jump a little bit, but I am going to get within 10 my five minutes. If you have questions at the end, I would 11 love to hear them.

12 THE COURT: Just remember the reporter needs to be 13 able to write down what we say.

14 MR. KIRPALANI: I promise not to do Spanish on you.

15 The thing that's bothered me about the Commonwealth
16 agent's argument from the very, very beginning, this whole 17 concept of natural law, what's possible, what's not possible.
18 The comment that COFINA can't have what doesn't yet exist, it 19 presupposes something that also is wrong. I think your Honor 20 hit upon it in one of your last questions to Mr. Yanez, which 21 is, if the government -- the statute doesn't say the common 22 law. It says the government, which includes COFINA -- doesn't 23 own revenue until the revenue is actually delivered or 24 collected, then why is it the right answer that upon collection 25 or upon -- right now it's my money in my pocket. I go to this

1 the store, I buy the TV, right. And then the merchant collects 2 my 7 percent sales tax or 11 and a half percent, with the 3 surcharge, sales tax.

4 At that time, right before that transfer from me, the 5 customer, it was my property, right. And so why is it correct
6 to start with the supposition that upon the payment being made 7 it becomes the Commonwealth's property? That's just made up.
8 The statute tells you, when it becomes an actual piece of cash
9 from the transaction, who owns it. It's COFINA.

10 I realize baseball season started last week, but there 11 is no tie goes to the Commonwealth here. You look at the 12 statute to determine who is the owner upon the collection and 13 it's the Commonwealth who imposed that tax, imposed that 14 statute, and told us who is going to be the owner, and it was 15 COFINA. So that's my answer to the who owns it question.

16 THE COURT: Is that also your answer to the when 17 whoever owns it owns it question? If so, is there any 18 significance in the difference between my TV purchase today and 19 2007?

20 MR. KIRPALANI: No. Because what was transferred was 21 the right to those revenues. When and if items are sold in the 22 future, who will be the owner was determined by the legislative 23 assembly in 2007 and it specifically said, it shall not be 24 available resources.

25 We haven't talked at all about that second section.

1 There is no ambiguity in what the legislative assembly said in 2 that second paragraph after Section 12(a) of the COFINA
3 Enabling Act. The second section says, and this is how it will 4 be deposited, those future sales, and it shall not be property
5 of the Commonwealth and shall not be available resources. It 6 shall not be given to the Secretary of the Treasury. All of 7 that was done in 2007. So I don't think it changes when the 8 actual transfer had occurred.

9 The GO bondholders say the -- this is another point 10 here your Honor, shifting gears. The core tax revenues can't 11 be transferred, but airport fees, other taxes and fees used for 12 special purposes can be transferred. But they say it fast in 13 the hope that nobody reads the Constitution. There is nothing 14 in the Constitution that talks about this distinction, this 15 dichotomy that is being drawn.

16 Let's take a simple example. How about PREPA? How 17 about PRASA? These are the core essential governmental 18 functions of any civilized society to provide clean water, to 19 provide electric power for the people. Why are the fees and 20 surcharges that are applied to that power generation and that 21 water cleanliness not available resources? Why aren't the 22 PREPA bonds counted against the debt service limit? The only 23 reason is because, I would submit, the GO bondholders don't 24 want to go there. But their argument proves too much.

25 Your Honor, I think, was correct in the questions to 1 Mr. Stancil that the text of the Constitution only applies to 2 debt limit to what it applies it to. We are not here to 3 redebate whether that's a good thing or not. It did seem a lot 4 like this is a political question as to whether that's a good 5 way to create a state or not a good way, and we know different 6 states have done it differently.

7 The last thing I'll leave you with, because I'm about 8 out of time, is that a lot of states don't even issue GO bonds.
9 They don't want to give full faith and credit for exactly the 10 reasons that we are here today, because that is when those 11 really tough ugly choices have to be made about whether 12 bondholders should be paid or whether hospitals should be 13 closed when people need medical services. COFINA is not about 14 that, your Honor. Thank you.

15 THE COURT: Thank you.

16 Mr. Mayer.

17 MR. DUNNE: You are correct. Mr. Mayer has three 18 minutes left, and I believe Mr. Mayer ceded two of his three 19 minutes to me.

20 I apologize in advance to the court reporter. I will 21 try not to do speed argument.

22 Couple of quick points and I am going to jump around, 23 your Honor. The first one is indulge me in a quick thought.
24 Let's assume we are back in '06 for a moment. Let's assume 25 Mr. Rosenberg and Mr. Stancil are representing a bond group

1 that is coming up for refinancing at that time, and the 2 Commonwealth is encountering some market difficulties with 3 respect to the cost of that capital. And the Commonwealth
4 decides, I can create a new tax. Call it the SUT.

5 The GOs would have two choices. They could wait for 6 that SUT to be collected over time. And as that SUT gets 7 brought into the Commonwealth, it becomes available resources 8 for the GOs, but they would realize that may take years or 9 decades to accumulate to sufficient size, or they could avail
10 themselves of a standard securitization structure to monetize 11 that stream in exchange for permanent and immediate sale of 12 present and future SUT collections. That structure itself
13 could then issue bonds. The proceeds of those bonds would go 14 and pay off the GOs. They would become available resources of 15 the Commonwealth and pay them off. They would look at the 16 Puerto Rico Constitution. They wouldn't see any antidedication 17 of revenue provision, and they would see that this isn't used 18 to calculate the debt limit. I suspect the GOs would pick door 19 No. 2. It's an easier way to be repaid. That's a supposition 20 and beside the point.

21 What matters is they can't have both doors. What they 22 can't have is both the SUT over time and the proceeds of the 23 bonds. What the new bond proceeds did was, they ratified the 24 SUT. It became available resources in another garb. It wasn't 25 the SUT stream of payments over time. It was immediate. But

1 you can't now argue that the SUT is available resources as well
2 for the all reasons we said.

3 Two other quick points, your Honor. One is, I urge 4 your Honor to read Hawkins, the Indiana Supreme Court. I
5 mentioned it in connection with Mr. Despins' arguments, but it
6 also dealt with Mr. Stancil's Cerajewski case because it
7 essentially overruled both of them, and they cite a Law Review 8 article in it that will bring you to the kind of bedrock of 9 modern municipal bond financing, and you don't recast 10 legislative enactments.

11 Lastly, your Honor, on 14(c), I know that the proviso 12 simply said substitutive collateral. It says substitutive tax 13 income or collateral. It neatly tracks all three categories 14 that precede it. Mr. Despins would like you to eliminate, when 15 they are a nullity, the substitutive tax and substitutive 16 income portions of that, and your Honor is counseled by 17 numerous interpretive canons not to do that. I also agree with 18 Mr. Yanez that you don't have to reach that issue.

19 Thank you.

20 THE COURT: Put on your wings, Mr. Mayer.

21 MR. MAYER: First, the language of the statute says, 22 future funds that must be deposited in the account that will be 23 positive. It says this transfer is made in exchange. It was 24 the present tense. Second, I agree with the statement that you 25 don't need to resolve the issue with what happens if they try

1 to remove the taxes.

2 I would point out there are at least three highest 3 court in state cases, starting with Pierce County v. State of 4 Washington that holds that you can't just repeal a tax once 5 pledged to bondholders, even where your Constitution retains 6 the power to repeal the tax. And that's 148 P.3d 1002 (2006).
7 If this becomes an issue of importance to the Court, you can 8 ask the parties to brief it. Thank you.

9 THE COURT: Now we return to the Commonwealth.

10 MR. STANCIL: Your Honor, I try to get six minutes.
11 It's very dramatic to watch that ticking away.

12 Let me come back.

13 THE COURT: Try to keep it exciting.

14 MR. STANCIL: No one would accuse me for lacking
15 excitement of the subject matter.

16 Let me start with the text. We alone, we alone, our 17 side alone offers a coherent meaning to the term available 18 resources in section 2, section 7, and section 8 of the 19 Constitution. They don't like it. But they have nothing to 20 say that makes that provision make sense in context.

21 Mr. Yanez ends up doing what I think is in fact 22 exactly backwards and says, the general taxing power controls 23 over the specific provisions that control fiscal 24 responsibility, 180 degrees opposite, your Honor. The specific 25 governs the general.

1 If he were correct, the broad taxing power would be 2 licensed to ignore First Amendment restrictions, the 3 restriction on public school, private school support that I was 4 referencing earlier. That's not how it works. It's exactly 5 upside down.

6 The fact that the drafters may not have predicted this 7 exact method of evasion is not an answer. I encourage the 8 Court to please read the Maestros case that we cite. It goes 9 through exactly the mode of interpretation that we are offering 10 for the text here, which is, it speaks only to support for 11 private schools, should that also reach support for private 12 school students, and the Court had no trouble looking at Trias
13 Monge, looking for the purpose of this provision in concluding 14 yes. This is exactly what the Puerto Rico Supreme Court has 15 done and will do.

16 Please also read Cerajewski, the Indiana case.
17 Mr. Yanez said, well, the debt restriction there this is a 18 little different. It is a little different, but the mode of 19 interpretation is spot on. There was no express prohibition in 20 Cerajewski of having these overlapping taxation districts. I 21 won't quote because I get in trouble when I start quoting and 22 reading too fast. If the Court will look at page 652 of that 23 decision, the Court walks through and says this would be a 24 simple end run around the clear principle that's articulated in 25 their debt limit provision.

1 Mr. Yanez says, well, if it's a loophole, the answer
2 to that, I believe, he said is well the legislature has 3 discretion. That doesn't work for constitutions. A 4 constitutional loophole by definition cannot be solved with 5 legislative discretion. A constitution binds the legislature, 6 even and especially when it doesn't want to be bound. That is 7 the defined feature of a constitutional restraint.

8 THE COURT: I think he is saying it's not a loophole.
9 It's a grant of discretion.

10 MR. STANCIL: I think beauty is in the eye of the 11 beholder on that, your Honor. I guess I would say it's not a 12 loophole. How are we where we are?

13 With respect to the drafting history, 100 percent, 100
14 percent of the drafting history supports our interpretation.
15 Mr. Yanez says, well, it applies only to the governor. That is 16 flat wrong. Let me explain what he's trying to do. Trias 17 Monge says that it places these resources, all resources, in 18 absolute first term beyond the power of the governor.

19 The reason he said governor is because under the Jones 20 Act, which preceded the Constitution, the governor had 21 discretion to reorder the priority. They took that away in the 22 Constitution. They didn't grant the legislature some power or 23 suggest that there is some legislative exception to the plain 24 text. He says, and I think I would look also to the text of 25 article 6. Section 8 says nothing about the legislature shall

1 not. It says the debt gets paid first. Moreover, if you look 2 at the subject heading to article 6 it says, general 3 provisions. It doesn't say executive legislature, like the 4 earlier articles do.

5 Last, and not least, there have been a couple of 6 attempts at tactical effect arguments. That takes a few 7 different forms. The first is the double counting argument.
8 Well, he made available resources. The proceeds can't be 9 available resources and you have the available resources in the 10 SUT going forward. That's not right. Any impermissible 11 financing, by definition, yields immediate proceeds, but that 12 doesn't make it permissible.

13 So the fact that they generated available resources in 14 2006 and in subsequent issuances says nothing about whether 15 they had the authority to try to claim the resources that 16 became unavailable.

17 Moreover, we heard Mr. Kirpalani, in particular, says, 18 COFINA is not about taking essential services away. COFINA is 19 not about that. With respect, your Honor, he is dead wrong.
20 The Constitution gives us, and I understand that your Honor had 21 pushed on this, but the Constitution I think clearly gives the 22 GOs first priority over all funds, and the statute reconfirms 23 that constitutional demand.

24 Look at what COFINA does. If the Court is concerned
25 or if Mr. Kirpalani is concerned about bondholders coming ahead

1 of the essential services, ask the COFINAs where is their 2 constitutional authority to take 40 years of tax revenue ahead
3 of any service whatsoever. There is absolutely no basis for 4 this. If anyone is concerned about grabbing a head of 5 essential services, it should be the COFINA structure, which 6 takes all that money off the table before it even gets in the 7 door, or at least tries to.

8 This has nothing to with PREPA or PRASA or energy or 9 water. The drafting history, again, is crystal clear that 10 public corporations that generate their own revenue don't 11 count. They are outside of the constitutional framework for 12 the reason that revenue bonds everywhere, real revenue bonds, 13 are outside the Constitution.

14 COFINA is not a real revenue bond. It's an off-book 15 financing scheme designed to evade all of these limits. With 16 respect, your Honor, the only way forward for Puerto Rico is to 17 go back to the constitutional intent.

18 THE COURT: Thank you.

19 Mr. Despins. As you're walking up there, Mr. Despins, 20 I will need to hear from you because I haven't heard from 21 Mr. Stancil or the Retirees how you walk through the English 22 Spanish thing as well.

23 On the balanced budget amendment, because I understand 24 it's your position that it is the English language version that 25 controls, and I haven't had anyone come up to me and point me

1 to definitive documentation other than speculation that 2 Mr. Truman read all of his legislation himself and had no
3 expert assistance ever.

4 MR. DEPSINS: Your Honor, I am not the right person to 5 answer this, meaning my colleague here can answer it. I'll try 6 to cover the rebuttal points very quickly, and he will come up 7 to address that.

8 Let me go through this very quickly, because there is 9 not a lot of time, the question about a loan, how does it work
10 and all that. Page 18, and footnote 6 that goes on page 18, 11 document No. 322 in the adversary proceeding.

12 The next point I want to address is this issue that if 13 you were to rule for the Commonwealth on this, and Mr. Mayer 14 said that's the end of access to capital market, let me just 15 remind everyone and the Court that Argentina, not in this 16 courtroom, in this courthouse, sort of, not literally, but 17 tortured the bondholders for about 10 years here going back and 18 forth three times to the Second Circuit.

19 And at the end of the day they did a century bond 20 offer, century meaning a 100-year term. It was oversubscribed.
21 This idea that somehow if the Court were to rule that a statute 22 works in one way, not the way they thought -- although, 23 frankly, the way everyone at the time thought it worked -- that 24 somehow it will cut off access to capital markets is just 25 wrong.

1 Your Honor, the points raised by Mr. Kirpalani
2 referring to Section 201407 and also the section regarding 3 confirmation in the PROMESA statute raise the question of 4 advisory opinions. And built into all these sections, the 5 point is there has to be a valid priority. There is not a 6 section that says, COFINA gets a pass. It's whatever the Court 7 determines COFINA to be.

8 The other point is, your Honor, on accounting I want 9 to refer the Court to our briefs on that. But the reason why 10 accounting is important, your Honor, is not because you are 11 bound by that but because they found that this was a secure 12 transaction, not because of some crazy accounting rule, but 13 because they found that the Commonwealth kept control over the 14 process and that defeated any other type of treatment. It 15 defeated a true sale treatment and that's not binding on the 16 Court, but it's illustrative of what's going on.

17 Your Honor, on the argument regarding 14(c), these are 18 all fascinating arguments, but at the end of the day you have 19 to look at the various opinions. In their own bond statement 20 that belie this whole argument that 14(c), the proviso, the 21 first part of the proviso is subject to substitutive
22 collateral.

23 Then the other question you asked Mr. Yanez is, what 24 about the point that if you are right, the transfer of 25 substitutive collateral occurred in 2007. The response was, we 1 have never asserted that.

2 Your Honor, it's nice for them to say that. That's 3 not the way the statute works. We have a principal approach on 4 this. They are saying that, no, because they don't care. They 5 know there won't be a substitutive lateral. That's very cute.
6 But the statute itself calls for a substitutive collateral to 7 be deposited in that account. If we are going to follow the 8 statute, they can't just walk away from that and say, we are 9 not asserting that. The statute actually reads that way.

10 At this point I would ask Mr. Bliss to come up to 11 address the Spanish issue.

12 THE COURT: Thank you.

13 MR. BLISS: Your Honor, James Bliss of Paul Hastings
14 on behalf of the Commonwealth agent. I understand I have a 15 minute and that minute is elapsing as I speak.

16 The argument is that under the Federal Relations Act
17 of 1950, Congress authorized the people of Puerto Rico to adopt 18 the Constitution. That act provided that, quote, upon approval 19 by the Congress, the Constitution shall become effective.

20 THE COURT: I think it says upon approval by the 21 Congress adoption thereafter by the constitutional convention
22 and proclamation by the governor becomes effective. It goes 23 back to the island presumably in Spanish if you are going to go 24 by what language people are likely to read. How does that make 25 English definitive?

1 MR. BLISS: Your Honor, you're referring to law 447,
2 which amended the Federal Relations Act to approve the Puerto 3 Rico Constitution. That law provided that, quote, the 4 Constitution of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, hereby 5 approved, shall become effective when the constitutional 6 convention of Puerto Rico shall have declared in a formal 7 resolution its acceptance in the name of the people of Puerto 8 Rico of the conditions of approval herein contained and when 9 the governor of Puerto Rico, being duly notified by the proper 10 officials of the constitutional convention of Puerto Rico, if 11 such resolution of acceptance has been formally accepted, shall 12 issue a proclamation to that effect.

13 By the plain terms of law 447, it was the version 14 hereby approved.

15 THE COURT: And do you have a document that you can 16 point me to that shows that the version hereby approved was 17 solely an English version, not an exhibit with an English and a 18 Spanish version, not an English version that says, if this is 19 an English translation of the Spanish version? Is there 20 something besides the brackets that you all inserted in the 21 quote from 447 that makes it definitive that the English 22 version was the only thing that was ever approved?

23 MR. BLISS: What we have is President Truman and 24 members of Congress did not speak or read Spanish.

25 THE COURT: They can't hire people who speak Spanish

1 and can talk to them about what the Constitution says?

2 MR. BLISS: We also have the point that the Congress 3 conditioned its approval on certain amendments which were 4 presented in English.

5 THE COURT: This provision wasn't amended, correct?
6 It wasn't sent back in English. It wasn't specifically 7 redrafted and sent back in English?

8 MR. BLISS: That's correct, your Honor. Thank you, 9 your Honor.

10 THE COURT: I am as ever grateful to you all for the 11 care that you put into your briefs, the arguments today, and 12 for engaging me on these questions, which are obviously very 13 serious, very difficult, and quite consequential for Puerto 14 Rico. I will equally seriously carry this under advisement.

15 I am looking forward to the arguments on the 25th 16 about who should be deciding the constitutional questions, and 17 we will all be in touch and seeing lots of each other, I'm 18 sure.

19 MR. DEPSINS: Your Honor, I was asked to raise this 20 point by the litigators of my shop. This is not a criticism on 21 anyone, but there is a schedule set to resolve this issue, 22 including the potential trial. I'm not saying we shouldn't, 23 but I'm just saying that there is that.

24 Both Paul Hastings and Willkie Farr are preparing, 25 because they have to prepare because the schedule is so tight,

1 for the potential trial. That's costly. It involves expert 2 witnesses, which you may never hear from.

3 The point is, would it make sense to suspend the 4 scheduling for now so that we don't have to incur those costs
5 going forward? Because it will save money for everyone. I 6 don't think the COFINA agent would mind that.

7 THE COURT: That is an application that you all could 8 make that hasn't been made to me yet. It does seem to me that 9 in all of the briefing and argumentation, no one has certainly 10 taken the global position that there are any material issues of 11 fact that preclude resolution of this question as a matter of 12 law. There are a few little pockets of things, depending on 13 where one goes in the Venn diagram. It seems to me that among 14 the people who have briefed these issues who are parties, there 15 is no one saying that there is anything that has to be resolved 16 in a trial.

17 Is there anyone who is a party to this case who would 18 oppose this oral application for a stay of the trial
19 preparation requirements pending determination of the motions
20 for summary judgment? Raise your hand if you oppose it.

21 The trial preparation requirements are stayed pending
22 further order of the Court.

23 MR. DEPSINS: Thank you, your Honor.

24 THE COURT: Thank you. Good afternoon, everyone.
